SUSTAINABILITY IN MALAYSIA

Due to its rich biodiversity, Malaysia is one of the 17 megadiverse countries, which together encompass 70% of all known species on Earth.

Malaysia is home to many endangered animals, such as Malayan Tigers and Borneo Elephants. Furthermore, natural resources are the backbone of the Malaysian economy. Therefore, Malaysia prioritizes maintaining and protecting such crucial environments.

In 1992, Malaysia committed to maintaining a minimum of 50% of its terrestrial area under forest tree cover at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. More than 30 years later, Malaysia's forest cover stands at 54.6%, or 18.04 million hectares, of its total land area, exceeding the country's initial commitment.

Therefore, Malaysia is considered an HFLD (High Forest, Low Deforestation) developing country, with a significant portion of its land area covered by forests and low deforestation rates over time.

These results are a combination of governmental action, non-profit organizations, and private companies that work to protect the Malaysian environment.

ON-LAND EFFORTS

Land Environments

To safeguard its rich biodiversity and ecosystems, the government of Malaysia has established an extensive network of protected areas, including national parks, wildlife reserves, and forest reserves. These efforts are supported by legislation such as the National Forestry Act and the Ecological Fiscal Transfer, which incentivizes state governments to protect and increase the coverage of protected areas.

The Federal Land Development Authority (FELDA) effort in Malaysia is one of the most successful land resettlement initiatives. Established in 1956, FELDA comprises over 400 settler communities, covering 16% of Malaysia's land. The effort has significantly improved the lives of the landless by providing housing, jobs, income from agriculture, and land ownership. Preserving green spaces in urban areas is important for enhancing biodiversity, mitigating climate change, and improving quality of life. Destinations like the Kuala Lumpur Forest Eco Park and the Penang City Park offer space for recreation while conserving natural habitats within urban landscapes.

More government and NGO initiatives in Malaysia include:

Orangutan Rehabilitation Centers

Malaysia has globally acclaimed orangutan conservation facilities dedicated to rehabilitating and providing sanctuary for orphaned and injured orangutans, one of the world's most endangered primates. There is Sepilok Orangutan Rehabilitation Centre in Sabah and Semenggoh Wildlife Centre in Sarawak.

Heart of Borneo Project + Central Forest Spine

Both initiatives aim to protect and restore forest ecosystems.

Kinabatangan Community Conservation Area

This project in Sabah empowers indigenous communities to participate in wildlife conservation and ecotourism, fostering sustainable development.

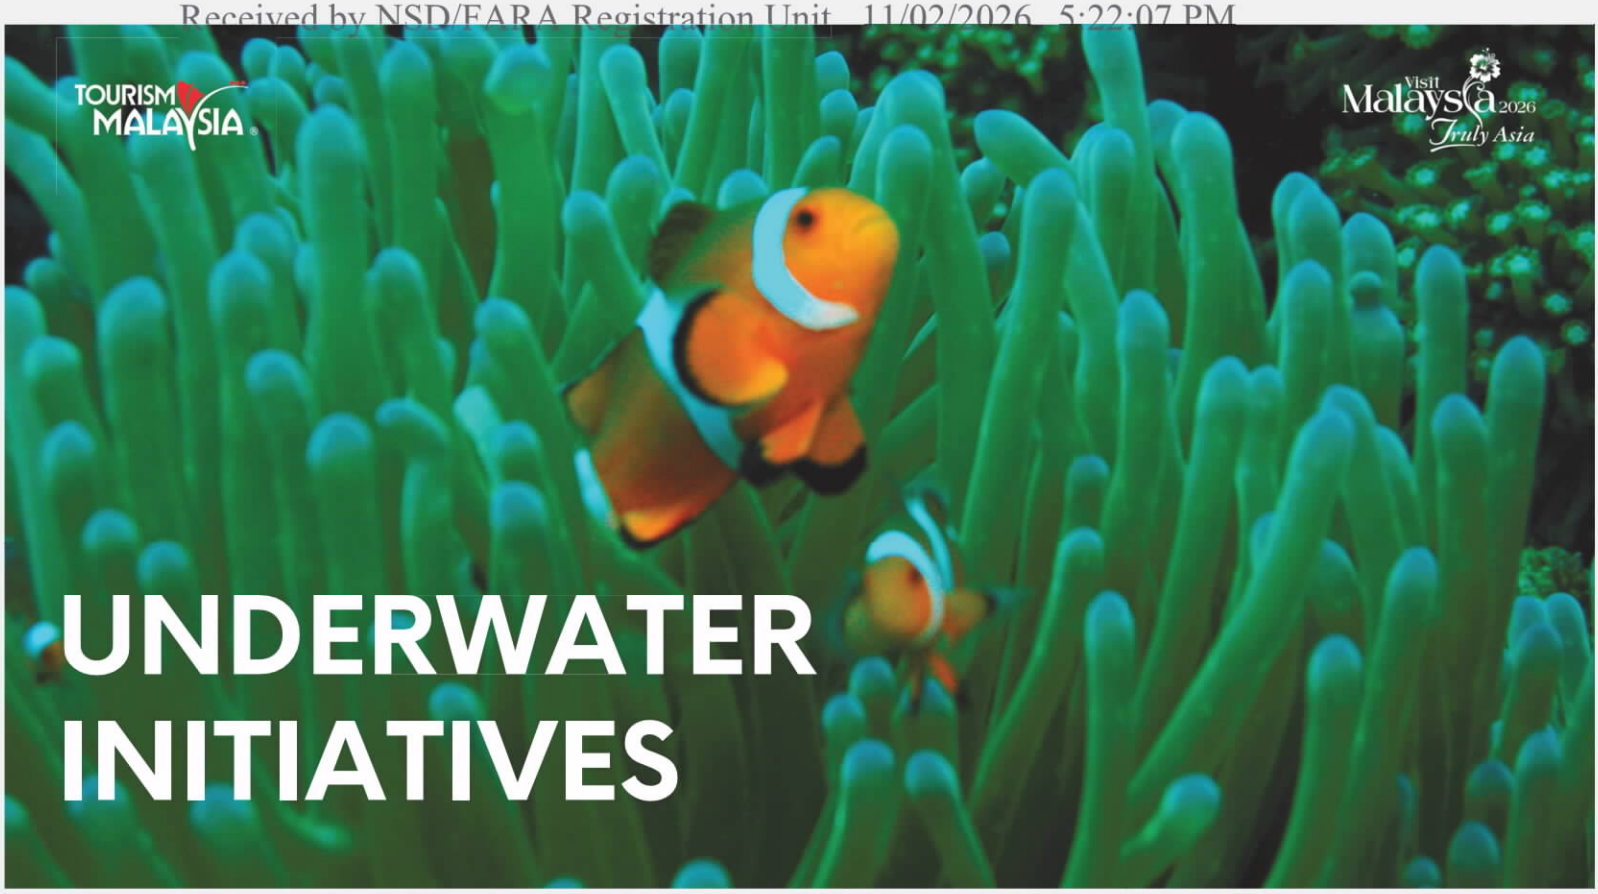

Forest Peoples Programme

Efforts are underway to protect the land rights of indigenous communities in Malaysia, who face challenges such as land encroachment and inadequate legal recognition. Advocacy groups like the Indigenous Peoples Network of Malaysia (JOAS) and the Forest Peoples Programme (FPP) work to secure these rights, empower communities politically, and support their land management and self-determination.

UNDERWATER INITIATIVES

Marine Environments

Malaysia's waters are not only a desirable destination for tourists, they are also home to sea turtles, sharks, barracuda, and diverse fish and coral species.

Notable government and NGO marine sustainability projects in Malaysia include:

Sipadan Island

Closes annually for a month of recovery for the marine ecosystem, including sharks, turtles, barracuda, and vibrant reefs.

Reef Check Malaysia

Monitors over 300 coral reefs each year and engages in marine conservation and management. One of them is Cintai Tioman, coral reef expeditions to Tioman Island that provides vital data on coral reef health and human-induced threats within the Tioman archipelago—data previously unavailable.

Coral Triangle Initiative

This initiative addresses essential issues such as food security, climate change, and marine biodiversity. It is the pioneering multilateral cooperation focusing on ensuring food security through the sustainable management of marine natural resources, while also considering the impacts of climate change.

MareCet Research Organisation

Uses bioacoustic data to develop mitigation strategies, such as managing boat traffic and deploying pingers to prevent bycatch.

PULIHARA

PULIHARA conducts beach patrols at Lang Tengah Island, Tanjong Jara, and Chakar Hutan Beach to protect Malaysian sea turtles, aiming to prevent local extinction by safeguarding turtle eggs from poachers and natural predators.

Scuba Junkie

Employs sustainable practices like green waste systems, solar energy, and biodegradable products to protect marine and terrestrial ecosystems. Scuba Junkie also operates an eco-friendly dive resort on Mabul Beach.

EXPERIENCE NATURE

Many tourist activities in Malaysia not only highlight the country's rich biodiversity but also play a significant role in environmental preservation. Tourists can experience the unique flora and fauna of the region while supporting conservation efforts.

National Parks

Malaysia's national parks, including Taman Negara, Gunung Mulu National Park (a UNESCO World Heritage Site), and Kinabalu Park, offer unforgettable experiences for tourists. Visitors can explore ancient tropical rainforests, trails, waterfalls, and diverse landscapes. Taman Negara is known for its ancient rainforest and canopy walkway, Gunung Mulu for its extensive cave systems, and Kinabalu Park for Mount Kinabalu, the third-highest peak of an island on Earth. These parks are ideal for ecotourism activities such as hiking, bird watching, and diving.

Diving

Malaysia is one of the world's premier dive destinations, renowned for its rich marine environment in the Indo-Pacific Basin. The remarkable biodiversity of marine life, along with warm and clear waters, beautiful islands, and stunning beaches, keeps divers returning to Malaysia. Notable diving sites include Tioman Island and Aur Island in Johor, Kapas Island and Perhentian Island in Terengganu, and Mantanani, Mataking, Mabul, and Sipadan in Sabah. These dive spots are excellent for beginners, with many other amazing sites to explore after completing a scuba diving course. Dive operators in Malaysia offer a comprehensive range of courses, from Open Water to Instructor Training, all taught by experienced and enthusiastic instructors.

Angling

Tourism Malaysia collaborates closely with the Malaysia Association of Angling, also known as Persatuan Memancing Malaysia (PeMM), and state governments to promote angling activities throughout Malaysia. Established as an NGO in 1990, PeMM's main objective is to promote angling and raise public awareness about the importance of preserving aquatic life. PeMM is also actively involved in managing educational programs on fishing for students and the general public. The organization is committed to the conservation of local species and environmental protection, and it promotes the catch-and-release doctrine.

Birdwatching

Malaysia boasts one of the world's oldest rainforest habitats, home to thousands of animals, including more than 450 species of birds. This treasured natural heritage has been preserved through significant efforts to protect it from human intervention and environmental changes. Tourism Malaysia has supported numerous entrepreneurs that show these habitats to tourists including forests, parks, and both private and public gardens.

Biking

Biking experiences in Malaysia include road cycling, mountain biking, back country biking, and biking tours to discover nature and culture. Recommended bike trails include Kampung Tanjung Piai in Johor, rice fields in Kedah, terrain in Pulau Tuba, heritage sites in Alor Setar, and historic paths in the Bujang Valley. More highly recommended bike destinations include nature trails in Sedim, cultural sites in Kota Bharu, the bustling cityscape of Kuala Lumpur, the countryside of Balik Pulau, scenic Kota Kinabalu, and the Borneo Highland's endurance trail in Sarawak.

In Malaysia, eat, shop, and enjoy time well spent at top restaurants, malls, and boutiques. While food is highly important to the nation's cultural landscape, shopping is significant for the economy.

To eat in Malaysia is to taste its culture. The country's cuisine is a melting pot of vibrant and spicy flavors that reflects the diverse cultural heritage of the population. A visit to Malaysia is incomplete without experiencing its delicious and multicultural culinary scene, encompassing everything from cafes and street food to Michelin-starred restaurants.

Meanwhile, Malaysia's retail market thrives on domestic consumption and tourism, especially in Kuala Lumpur, known for its diverse retail scene from luxury boutiques to lively street markets.

Here's a guide to fill your stomach, closet, and heart in Malaysia.

Can't-Miss Food Cultures

Malay Cuisine

Malay dishes are known for their bold flavors and meals are often enjoyed in a communal style. Rice is a staple, typically eaten with the hands and accompanied by curries, vegetables, and sauce.
Dishes to try: satay, laksa, lasi nemak, ikan bakar

Malaysian Chinese Cuisine

Derived from Fujian, Cantonese, Hakka, and Teochew roots, this cuisine has evolved to incorporate local flavors and ingredients.
Dishes to try: Hainanese chicken rice, char kway teow, dim sum, bak kut teh, yong tau foo

Malaysian Indian Cuisine

Known for its fragrant spices and curries, this cuisine is a staple in Penang and Kuala Lumpur. Mamak stalls, popular for their milky teh tarik, serve as social hubs where Malaysians gather.
Dishes to try: roti canai, nasi kandar, mee goreng mamak, banana leaf rice

Indigenous Malaysian Cuisines

Indigenous culinary practices are experiencing a delicious and culturally significant revival in Malaysian Borneo. This renaissance celebrates the rich biodiversity of Borneo's forests and honors the island's traditional food culture.
Dishes to try: manuk pansoh, umai, Sarawak laksa, hinava

MALAYSIAN BREAKFAST CULTURE

In Malaysia, breakfast is truly the most important meal of the day—and for reasons beyond simple nutrition. Malaysian breakfast is a cultural institution that fosters unity and a shared identity among its people.

Featuring dishes like Roti Canai and Nasi Lemak, Malaysian breakfast culture is a testament to the country's rich, multicultural heritage, and brings together diverse communities through the universal language of food. Underscoring its cultural significance, Malaysian breakfast culture has been nominated for UNESCO's List of Intangible Cultural Heritage.

In addition to serving as a bridge between diverse cultures, breakfast is a delicious gateway for cultural tourism in Malaysia.

Roti Canai

Roti Canai, a flatbread with roots in Indian cuisine, has become a beloved staple in Malaysia. Known for its layered, soft, and fluffy texture with a crispy exterior, it is typically served with dhal curry, fish curry, and sambal ikan bilis (spicy anchovies). It is highly acclaimed in Taste Atlas 2024, ranking as the #2 Breakfast in the World, #2 Bread in the World, and #1 Malaysian Street Food, among other accolades.

Nasi Lemak

Nasi Lemak, often considered Malaysia's National Dish, originates from the western Malay peninsula. This dish consists of coconut milk rice served with sambal, crispy fried anchovies, toasted peanuts, and cucumber. Nasi Lemak is deeply rooted in Malay culture and is so popular that it is even featured in local McDonald's menus. The dish's nomination for UNESCO World Heritage status further highlights its cultural importance.

Teh Tarik

Teh Tarik, the unofficial national drink of Malaysia, is a hot milk tea beverage known for its frothy texture, achieved through a unique "pulling" process. This drink combines Indian, Chinese, and British influences, making it a symbol of Malaysia's multicultural heritage.

Malaysia's Famous Fruit

Known as the King of Tropical Fruit, durians are famous for their pungent odor and thorny exterior. Inside, however, lies a sweet, rich, and creamy pulp used in many Malaysian dishes, from ice cream and milkshakes to fritters and pastries.

Penang's Balik Pulau plantations are particularly renowned for producing some of the best durians in the world, alongside additional major producers in Penang, Pahang, and Johor.

A symbol of Malaysian culture, the durian is more than just a fruit. During the durian season, which runs from June to August, kiosks pop up all over the country, and people of all ages gather to enjoy this delicious fruit. Sharing a durian with friends and family is a beloved tradition among locals that visitors are encouraged to join, celebrating the fruit's long history in Malaysian culture.

Durian Tourism

Durian tourism is booming in Malaysia, especially during the harvest season from late May to August. This trend showcases the fruit's appeal and cultural significance, providing visitors with a unique chance to engage with local traditions, enjoy extraordinary flavors, and create unforgettable memories centered around this iconic fruit. Tourism Malaysia offers 62 Durian Tourism packages across 12 Malaysian states in 2024-2025!

ASIA'S UNIQUE DIVING DESTINATION

Why Malaysia?

Dense, Unique Marine Life

Malaysia, at the heart of the Indo-Pacific basin and the Coral Triangle, boasts top-ranked dive spots with excellent visibility. This region harbors 75% of all known coral species, 53% of the world's reefs, 40% of coral reef fish species, and six of the seven marine turtle species.

Year-Round Diving

Malaysia's east and west coasts have different rainy seasons, ensuring there's always a good time to visit. Diving is available year-round at multiple top destinations across the country.

Great for All Levels

Diving in Malaysia is suitable for all levels, including children, due to calm waters, protected reefs, and easy access to dive sites by speed boats. Novice and experienced divers alike will be amazed by the outstanding marine life.

On-Land Adventure

When you're not underwater, explore Malaysia's white sand beaches, luxury resorts, rich biodiversity, cultural heritage, and world-famous gastronomy.

Dedicated Marine Conservation

Conserving marine ecosystems is a priority, with several initiatives regenerating popular dive sites. For instance, in Sabah, passionate divers founded an organization to protect marine and terrestrial ecosystems for future generations.

MARINE CONSERVATION

Malaysia's waters are not only a desirable destination for tourists, they are also home to sea turtles, sharks, barracuda, and diverse fish and coral species. Notable marine sustainability projects, from Government, Non-profit organizations, and the private sector to preserve and protect Malaysia's underwater habitats and biodiversity include:

Coral Triangle Initiative

This initiative addresses essential issues such as food security, climate change, and marine biodiversity. It is the pioneering multilateral cooperation focusing on ensuring food security through the sustainable management of marine natural resources, while also considering the impacts of climate change.

Sipadan Island

Closes annually for a month to allow marine ecosystems to recover.

Reef Check Malaysia

Monitors over 300 coral reefs each year and engages in marine conservation and management. One of them is Cintai Tioman, coral reef expeditions to Tioman Island that provides vital data on coral reef health and human-induced threats within the Tioman archipelago - data that were previously unavailable.

MareCet Research Organisation

Uses bioacoustic data to develop mitigation strategies, such as managing boat traffic and deploying pingers to prevent bycatch.

Lang Tengah Turtle Watch

Protects endangered sea turtles on Malaysia's East Coast, saving over 150,000 turtle eggs since 2013.

SUSTAINABILITY IN MALAYSIA

Due to its rich biodiversity, Malaysia is one of the 17 megadiverse countries, which together encompass 70% of all known species on Earth.

Malaysia is home to many endangered animals, such as Malayan Tigers and Borneo Elephants. Furthermore, natural resources are the backbone of the Malaysian economy. Therefore, Malaysia prioritizes maintaining and protecting such crucial environments.

In 1992, Malaysia committed to maintaining a minimum of 50% of its terrestrial area under forest tree cover at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. More than 30 years later, Malaysia's forest cover stands at 54.6%, or 18.04 million hectares, of its total land area, exceeding the country's initial commitment.

Therefore, Malaysia is considered an HFLD (High Forest, Low Deforestation) developing country, with a significant portion of its land area covered by forests and low deforestation rates over time.

These results are a combination of governmental action, non-profit organizations, and private companies that work to protect the Malaysian environment.

ON-LAND EFFORTS

Land Environments

To safeguard its rich biodiversity and ecosystems, the government of Malaysia has established an extensive network of protected areas, including national parks, wildlife reserves, and forest reserves. These efforts are supported by legislation such as the National Forestry Act and the Ecological Fiscal Transfer, which incentivizes state governments to protect and increase the coverage of protected areas.

The Federal Land Development Authority (FELDA) effort in Malaysia is one of the most successful land resettlement initiatives. Established in 1956, FELDA comprises over 400 settler communities, covering 16% of Malaysia's land. The effort has significantly improved the lives of the landless by providing housing, jobs, income from agriculture, and land ownership. Preserving green spaces in urban areas is important for enhancing biodiversity, mitigating climate change, and improving quality of life. Destinations like the Kuala Lumpur Forest Eco Park and the Penang City Park offer space for recreation while conserving natural habitats within urban landscapes.

More government and NGO initiatives in Malaysia include:

Orangutan Rehabilitation Centers

Malaysia has globally acclaimed orangutan conservation facilities dedicated to rehabilitating and providing sanctuary for orphaned and injured orangutans, one of the world's most endangered primates. There is Sepilok Orangutan Rehabilitation Centre in Sabah and Semenggoh Wildlife Centre in Sarawak.

Heart of Borneo Project + Central Forest Spine

Both initiatives aim to protect and restore forest ecosystems.

Kinabatangan Community Conservation Area

This project in Sabah empowers indigenous communities to participate in wildlife conservation and ecotourism, fostering sustainable development.

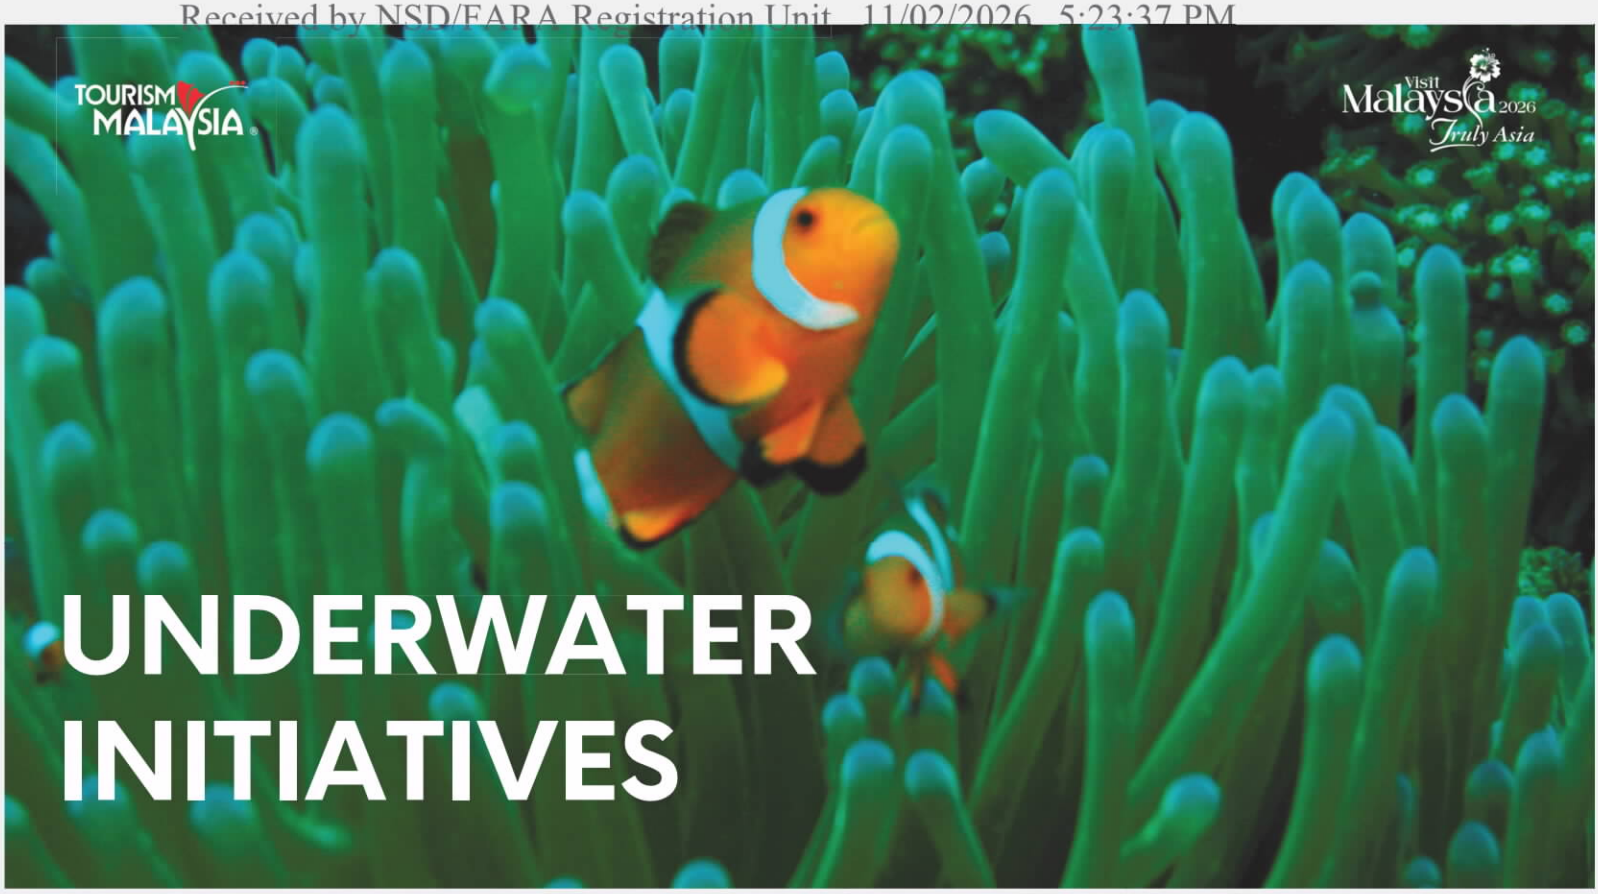

Forest Peoples Programme

Efforts are underway to protect the land rights of indigenous communities in Malaysia, who face challenges such as land encroachment and inadequate legal recognition. Advocacy groups like the Indigenous Peoples Network of Malaysia (JOAS) and the Forest Peoples Programme (FPP) work to secure these rights, empower communities politically, and support their land management and self-determination.

EXPERIENCE NATURE

Many tourist activities in Malaysia not only highlight the country's rich biodiversity but also play a significant role in environmental preservation. Tourists can experience the unique flora and fauna of the region while supporting conservation efforts.

National Parks

Malaysia's national parks, including Taman Negara, Gunung Mulu National Park (a UNESCO World Heritage Site), and Kinabalu Park, offer unforgettable experiences for tourists. Visitors can explore ancient tropical rainforests, trails, waterfalls, and diverse landscapes. Taman Negara is known for its ancient rainforest and canopy walkway, Gunung Mulu for its extensive cave systems, and Kinabalu Park for Mount Kinabalu, the third-highest peak of an island on Earth. These parks are ideal for ecotourism activities such as hiking, bird watching, and diving.

Diving

Malaysia is one of the world's premier dive destinations, renowned for its rich marine environment in the Indo-Pacific Basin. The remarkable biodiversity of marine life, along with warm and clear waters, beautiful islands, and stunning beaches, keeps divers returning to Malaysia. Notable diving sites include Tioman Island and Aur Island in Johor, Kapas Island and Perhentian Island in Terengganu, and Mantanani, Mataking, Mabul, and Sipadan in Sabah. These dive spots are excellent for beginners, with many other amazing sites to explore after completing a scuba diving course. Dive operators in Malaysia offer a comprehensive range of courses, from Open Water to Instructor Training, all taught by experienced and enthusiastic instructors.

Angling

Tourism Malaysia collaborates closely with the Malaysia Association of Angling, also known as Persatuan Memancing Malaysia (PeMM), and state governments to promote angling activities throughout Malaysia. Established as an NGO in 1990, PeMM's main objective is to promote angling and raise public awareness about the importance of preserving aquatic life. PeMM is also actively involved in managing educational programs on fishing for students and the general public. The organization is committed to the conservation of local species and environmental protection, and it promotes the catch-and-release doctrine.

Birdwatching

Malaysia boasts one of the world's oldest rainforest habitats, home to thousands of animals, including more than 450 species of birds. This treasured natural heritage has been preserved through significant efforts to protect it from human intervention and environmental changes. Tourism Malaysia has supported numerous entrepreneurs that show these habitats to tourists including forests, parks, and both private and public gardens.

Biking

Biking experiences in Malaysia include road cycling, mountain biking, back country biking, and biking tours to discover nature and culture. Recommended bike trails include Kampung Tanjung Piai in Johor, rice fields in Kedah, terrain in Pulau Tuba, heritage sites in Alor Setar, and historic paths in the Bujang Valley. More highly recommended bike destinations include nature trails in Sedim, cultural sites in Kota Bharu, the bustling cityscape of Kuala Lumpur, the countryside of Balik Pulau, scenic Kota Kinabalu, and the Borneo Highland's endurance trail in Sarawak.
