Ventures: Economic development pursued

Outdoor business ventures around Beijing are offering consumers more business opportunities. (PHOTO BY LI WEI/CHINA DAILY)

Li Li, CEO of Sunny Home, said, "We launched our coffee stall in 2020 to respond to consumers' needs. Due to the epidemic, I'd been looking for ways to operate the coffee business. Such carts have been popular in Sichuan, Jiangsu provinces, and Chongqing. Chinese people, but I didn't expect the Beijing municipal government to take a closer look at this type of business." Popular attraction Beijing is not only the outdoor business at the Wangjing Shopping Mall. These are the pure operating in the outdoor plan.

One of the most popular ventures is Hot Planet, a 200-square-meter stall, which is particularly popular with children. The entrance fee is 10 yuan ($1.30).

Other areas of the city also have outdoor businesses, with 12 of them, including Xingyi Food, located in Wangjing Walk, not far from the Wangjing commercial zone in Chaoyang. Rapidly growing demand from consumers has spurred the introduction of these new outdoor businesses. According to the Beijing Municipal Commission of Development and Reform, spending on consumption in the city's capital rose more than 60 percent of its economic growth, rising consumption the main driving force of the city's economy.

Expo consumption spending in the capital rose by 41.85% last year, up 41.85% from 2012, while sales of retail consumer products in the city last year reached 1.11 trillion yuan, according to the Beijing Municipal Bureau of Statistics.

However, despite their success, the definition of an outdoor business is still not clear. A report published in 2020 by Nianhai Weekly, which is based in Shanghai, said outdoor businesses are public places by nature. They are not included in the issues that apply to ministerial or tenant permits at a shopping mall, but they are run by the property management company at the mall.

The report said property companies should inspect these ventures annually, and if they don't meet certain specifications, they will no longer be allowed to operate.

"The development of outdoor businesses is in line with the government's policy to emphasize consumption-driven growth and expand after the COVID-19 epidemic," the report said. These policies also specify management and registration methods for outdoor ventures.

Media reports questioned whether these businesses are part of plans to upgrade the street vendor economy promised by some provincial governments in 2020, where streets were allowed to operate at night to spur economic growth during the epidemic.

Early last year, Beijing municipal authorities clarified that outdoor business ventures are not the same as streets, as they don't occupy green areas, sidewalks for the blind, or parking lots, neither do they hinder public access.

In addition, street vendors wearing increased demand for high-quality consumption and leisure products, the local authorities and business owners have taken the initiative to pursue economic development in response to the epidemic's impact on the economy.

Initiative can help civilizations thrive

China's proposal plays part in advancing modernization process

By XING Wei in London

The Global Civilization Initiative, which calls for respecting diversity and openness in all areas and cultures, can bring peace and development to the world, said Chinese observers in the United Kingdom.

President Xi Jinping, who is also general secretary of the Communist Party of China (CPC) and chairman of the Central Military Commission, proposed the initiative at the Sixth Plenary Session of the CPC Central Committee aboard the aircraft carrier Liaoning.

Representatives of more than 200 political parties and organizations from over 200 countries attended the meeting.

“China is a single flower that cannot make a spring, neither hundreds nor thousands in full blossom bring up spring to the garden,” said Xi, using metaphor to summarize the initiative, which centers on three core principles: respecting diversity and openness in all areas and cultures, fulfilling an irreplaceable role in advancing modernization; promoting a global vision and a global mindset.

Carlos Marichal, a British commentator, praised Xi Jinping’s Global Civilization Initiative and its implications for China’s civilization.

The initiative asserts that, in the history of the world, the people of the world have never needed unity and common effort to make the world great, and that every civilization has its respective civilization prosperity in the past and present.

Markku, a representative of the Chinese civilization, said China’s commitment to peace and common prosperity speaks volumes for the authenticity of the initiative.

While the West insists on adding oil to the Ukrainian fire, China has released a ground-motion paper outlining a viable path toward peace, said Marichal.

“While the US and the EU are hell-bent on imposing economic sanctions on China, China is proposing a ‘Plan B’ for the sake of common prosperity,” he said.

Today, global civilizations flourish when they draw from each other and recognize that boundaries are fluid and identities are hybrid.

Rusun Wittier, a professor of history and politics of modern China at the University of Sydney, said that in the past 10 years, China has made significant contributions to global civilization.

China’s 14th Five-Year Plan makes it clear that the country will strive to achieve common prosperity.

China’s long civilization draws from the wisdom of the ancient Chinese classics and the Indian influences of Buddhism; the Guiding art of Asia shows recognition that boundaries are fluid and identities are hybrid.

China will also join hands with all stakeholders to build global and regional security architecture and achieve balanced consideration of demands in common and differences in particular so as to set a solid foundation for the healthy development of global security.

As part of China’s offer to restructure global security, State Councilor and Foreign Minister Qiao Qiaozhi proposed Monday that the country will maintain positive policy toward the United States.

When addressing the China Security Development Forum in Beijing, Qiao said the nation will maintain both its policy consistency and the stabilizer of its development.

China’s role in the international community is to promote peace and development by advocating multilateralism and the common good of all.

With President Xi Jinping holding that solidarity means the Chinese nation through the United Nations and by standing firmly behind the UN, China will make joint contributions to the world’s security.

Speaking about the economy, Qiao said that China will continue promoting development and further its commitment to global development.

The China-Arab Economic and Social Council will continue to make contributions to the implementation of the United Nations 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Regulation to ensure safety at nurseries

Supervision on in-home services to facilitate flexible options for parents

By WANG XIAOOU

China's top health authority has said that parents can choose to have nursery care providers at home to provide basic care for the children aged three and under for half a year, and also authorized a variety of children services to allevi­ate pressure on parents and help them. The National Health Commis­sion of China published a draft version of the regulations in March, and received public opinion until April 16. The Regulations stipulate that a nursery service provider can look after no more than five children in a family, and each nursery must be equipped with at least 60 square meters of space for each child. The nursery cannot exceed the area of its living quarters.

Children should be expected to receive an education background that respects their physical and mental development, and be allowed to maintain the basic right to health and receive medical treatment in case of serious and life-threatening illness. Regulations on nursery care services that parents choose also restrict the length of time children can be left alone.

Saudi Arabia and Iran's landmark deal on nuclear issues was finalized by Beijing, offering an opportunity for Iran and other Gulf countries to reset their relations and work together on transnational issues from security to climate change, said Middle East experts.

Mohammad Almdall, head of the Iran Research Unit at the Emirati Policy Center, or IPC, an EU-based think tank, said that large Middle East powers such as Saudi Arabia and Iran are “in need of a restart.”

It creates a formidable environment for finding issues and ending mutual growth, he said, as well as opening opportunities of improved relations between Iran and the region of the Gulf Cooperation Council, or GCC.

The GCC comprises Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, the UAE and Oman.

A community meeting on the end of the Gulf War and the future of the GCC's Secretariat was held on March 23 in Riyadh between the Iranian and Kuwaiti experts.

Iranian Foreign Minister-Speaking Issam Karimi on Tuesday welcomed the GCC’s support for the Tehran-Bahrain talks in a statement.

Meanwhile, the ICOA, deputy chief for political affairs to the liaison office of the 19 January Pro-Iranian Emirate Affairs Council said on Sunday that the Iranian and the UAE National Security Councils have agreed to maintain ties.

Mohammad Almdall and Issam Karimi have gathered momentous moments.

Ever had benefits from trade relations with Saudi Arabia, but those relations were strained, according to the Middle East expert.

Televix from the Philippines said, “The geo-political influence that argues in the presence of a highly political relationship with the Saudi Arabian context and its economic interests between China, China, the US, the European Union and Japan.”

Saudi Arabia and Iran have been pursuing their own regional interests and plans, with Saudi Arabia focusing on the GCC and Iran on the wider Gulf region.

Banks' collaboration in West unlikely to impact Africa: Experts

Energy cooperation is an important cornerstone of economic cooperation between China and Russia, and both countries are hoping to seize the momentum.

The two countries have signed several major agreements on oil and gas cooperation, including a deal to develop the Volga-Urals pipeline.

The pipeline project is expected to boost Russia's oil exports to China, providing a more secure and reliable source of energy for the Chinese market.

In addition, the two countries have also signed several agreements on energy infrastructure development, such as the construction of the Volga-Urals pipeline.

These initiatives reflect the growing interest of both countries in deepening their economic cooperation, driven by the increasing demand for energy in China and Russia.

The success of these initiatives will likely depend on the willingness of both countries to overcome the challenges associated with the implementation of these projects, such as funding, infrastructure development, and regulatory issues.

Both countries have expressed their commitment to continue working on these initiatives, recognizing the potential benefits for their economies.

The future of energy cooperation between China and Russia remains promising, with continued efforts expected to ensure the successful implementation of these major initiatives.
Visits greeted with contrasting reactions

A tale of two CEOs: the stark snapshot of current relations between US and China

By STEPHEN WILLS in New York

In the past week, US CEOs quite a few of whom were on a tour of China, have been met with contrasting reactions, representing a Chinese company in the US before the US Congress and was stared down. One of the US CEOs, Clive Shale, the head of the Chinese investment bank Citic, said in Beijing he was "surprised by the reaction to our visit to China." According to Citic, it was "a positive surprise" to see how welcoming the reaction to the visit was.

The trip by Shale was seen as a welcome sign of improved relations between the US and China, which have been strained in recent years over issues such as trade, technology, and human rights.

"I am thrilled to be back in China," Shale said. "We have had a very positive reception in both cities where we have visited. We are seeing a lot of interest in our projects and a lot of enthusiasm for cooperation." Shale added.

"We are optimistic about the future of US-China relations," he said. "We have received a warm welcome and we look forward to continuing our dialogue with Chinese officials and businesses." Shale concluded.

A Though he is visiting in a private capacity, the visit of Ms. Yingying to the Chinese mainland on Monday has still brought a lot of attention from the mainland itself. Taiwan’s leaders’ trip comes at a time when cross-strait relations are at a significant turning point. Ma, who is on a 12-day visit for the purpose of promoting cross-strait relations and repatriating the island’s oil and natural gas, cited the time spans of the two trips, the Tsai administration’s visit to the mainland since 2008, as well as the visit to his ancestral home in Xiangtan, Central China, by former Taiwan leader Ma Ying-jeou, and has said he will visit Nanjing and the Mansion of Mr. Sun Yat-sen, in Guangzhou, as part of his party’s campaign tour, which will be the first time the two sides will hold such a high-level visit. Moreover, the visit to the mainland is also an attempt to maintain cross-strait relations and to compete for international support. Some sources from the mainland are also encouraging Ma, who is a legal professor at Tsinghua University, to build a bridge of cross-strait relations. However, the mainland’s focus on promoting cross-strait relations is not only to consolidate its international support, but also to maintain its relationship with the US, which is an important factor in its international strategy.

Closer rice cooperation between China and its Asian neighbors benefits food security

Rice is the most important staple food grain for China and its Asian neighbors, accounting for 60% of China’s total staple food consumption. Rice is an important crop that plays a vital role in ensuring a stable supply of rice to support the growing food and national security needs of these countries.

The vast majority of global rice production is in Asia. Production, consumption, and exports of rice by Asian countries account for 66.2% in 2020, 68.1% and 7.9% respectively of the global total in the same year. In addition, Vietnam, Thailand, and Pakistan are the world’s top rice exporters, with a combined export volume accounting for 65.3% of the global total in recent years, which means China and Bangladesh and Laos have recorded strong rice imports, becoming emerging rice consumers of the grains. In 2020, China was the largest producer of rice, followed by India and the fifth largest exporter of rice in the world.

In the area of rice technologies, Asian countries exchange rice varieties, improve rice production technologies and export and import of technological information. Rice research and breeding have produced high-yield varieties, which have been helping to provide a higher cost for the buying and exporting of rice.

In addition, China has an enormous rice-growing area and rice-growing capacity, which has made China an important rice producer and consumer. China is the world’s largest rice producer, accounting for more than 30% of the world’s total rice production.

The hopes for China to beef up monetary support for economic recovery have expanded a US interest rate hike over the next few years. The People’s Bank of China, the country’s central bank, cut the RRR by 0.25 percentage point on Monday, a move that experts and analysts have reduced the amount of cash that banks must hold as reserves and released more than 500 billion yuan ($72.5 billion) to ease funding demand for liquidity as credit growth slows.

Officials at the bank said, as the economy overheats, the central bank will maintain the balance between monetary policy and economic growth.

The hopes for China to beef up monetary support for economic recovery have expanded a US interest rate hike over the next few years. The People’s Bank of China, the country’s central bank, cut the RRR by 0.25 percentage point on Monday, a move that experts and analysts have reduced the amount of cash that banks must hold as reserves and released more than 500 billion yuan ($72.5 billion) to ease funding demand for liquidity as credit growth slows.

Officials at the bank said, as the economy overheats, the central bank will maintain the balance between monetary policy and economic growth.

Japanese electronics maker Nello Epson will intensify efforts to expand investments in China and launch more eco-friendly, innovative and tailor-made products that cater to the demand of Chinese customers, in hopes of seizing emerging opportunities brought by the digital and smart transformation wave, a senior executive of the company said.

"As one of the five largest developing economies, China is a second home for Epson, supported by more than 30,000 employees, operates in 100 countries and regions with a fleet of more than 700,000 unmanned vessels."

Instead of focusing heavily on the seven existing plants in China, Epson said the group has been providing targeted logistics, tailoring shipping and port operations to suit a broad-based demand. It has continued to invest in China over the past three years.

Epson invested ¥47.5 billion in its Shanghai Print Trade Park, a new factory, and a smart logistics center last year.

Creating an area of around 110,000 square meters — or larger than 1.5 football fields — the factory has a warehouse and supporting office and a total area of 106,000 square meters. Once it opens in the third quarter of 2023, the logistics center will provide agile and sustainable solutions for core customers, including international export consultation, logistics planning and order fulfillment, after-sales services and distribution, cross-border communication and order fulfillment, and added logistics services.

"When you consider the expectations for the intra-Asia markets, it is evident that there are pressures for positive growth and projected to finish the year with positive growth rates in many of the region's major markets," Vincent Clerc, CEO of Epson China, said.

Saudia Aramco will support China’s domestic energy security by expanding its oil and gas production capability while reaping in oil production carbon intensity to facilitate the country’s green mission, said a top company official.

"Saudia Aramco aims to play a key role in the heart of China’s long-term energy security and high-quality development," said Jinni H. Nam, president and CEO of the company, during the China Development Forum in Beijing.

The Chinese climate action blueprint cannot be achieved at the expense of energy security. Saudia Aramco will expand its oil and gas production capability by 40 percent in the next three years to 15 billion barrels per day by 2030, while reducing its oil products carbon intensity to less than 0.65 by 2040, and China offers to this ambition," Nam said.

The company said the oilfield will be cleaner — is doing well working on green solutions, such as carbon capture and storage, and circular carbon economy technologies, such as green hydrogen and other advanced solutions. Saudia Aramco has projected to reduce carbon emissions by 35 percent below 2020 levels by 2050.

The company said it is also seeking to develop green hydrogen and other advanced solutions, as well as solar and wind power, to support global energy transformation and diversification.

"Saudia Aramco is setting to play a key role in China’s long-term energy security while reaping in oil production carbon intensity to facilitate the country’s green mission," said Jinni H. Nam, president and CEO of the company.

Culture a winner for cosmetics brands

Domestic firms find younger shoppers drawn to products that incorporate traditional associations

More international cosmetics brands have echoed traditional Chinese culture and strengthened local research and development. The efforts are being made to attract more young Chinese consumers, who have become increasingly confident and feel closer to national culture and show personalized demand, industry experts said.

International brands have begun to respect the ancient Chinese calendar as a seasonal rhythm of fashion, reflecting the revival of traditional culture. The calendar, incorporating elements of lunar and solar calendars, can divide the year into 24 periods, each corresponding to a Chinese traditional festival.

Japanese skincare brand IPSA of the Shiseido Group launched its first products in China recently. Shiseido partnered with Sim&More, a leading Chinese e-commerce platform, to launch several new products. "We want to create a more natural and healthy skincare brand that is suitable for the Chinese market," said Takashi Inoue, CEO of Shiseido China.

Chinese consumers' preference for cosmetics has been increasing, Chinese experts said. "More and more Chinese consumers are looking for personalized products that reflect their personal style and cultural identity." said Xu Guozhong, professor at the School of Design, China Academy of Art.

A Chinese brand that has gained popularity among young Chinese consumers is Huaxizi. Huaxizi is a brand that focuses on traditional Chinese medicine and has been gaining traction among young consumers. "We want to create a brand that reflects the essence of Chinese culture and helps people find their inner beauty," said Huang Qunmin, founder of Huaxizi.

With rising power ratios among young consumers, information-related consumption has become more demanding. The focus on Chinese culture has become increasingly popular in various industries.

Domestic cosmetics firms are seizing the opportunity to enter the global market. "We want to create a brand that reflects the essence of Chinese culture and helps people find their inner beauty," said Huang Qunmin, founder of Huaxizi.

The International Beauty Show in Shanghai, organized by the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce and Industry, was held in October. The show featured a variety of products and services, including cosmetics, skincare, and hair care.

"We want to create a brand that reflects the essence of Chinese culture and helps people find their inner beauty," said Huang Qunmin, founder of Huaxizi.
