China seeks uinity with Himalayan neighbors

By ZHANG YUNHUI zhangyunbi@chinadaily.com.cn

Beijing has called on its neighbors in the trans-Himalayan region to strengthen unity and achieve common progress in connectivity, the green economy and ecological conservation.

The countries are asymmetrically and culturally diverse, they said, highly stake their values on ecological conservation and use partners in the process of achieving a harmonizing development that is based on the country’s principles.

Wang, a member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party of China Central Committee and director of the Office of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the CPC Central Committee, made the call while addressing the opening of the third China-India Nepal-Tibet-Myanmar Forum for International Cooperation in Naypyidaw. The trans-Himalayan region, on Thursday, Representative governments of 19 countries and their international organizations are participating in the international forum.

The trans-Himalayan region enjoys the highest altitude in the world. Weighted in 2019, the region aims to join the interconnected and common development of the region and other countries.

In his speech, Wang pointed out that since the launch of the forum, China has carried out close and in-depth cooperation with the countries in the trans-Himalayan region, thus playing an important role in promoting the sustainable development of the region and improving the quality of economic and environment.

China has signed several cooperation agreements with India, Bangladesh, Nepal and Bhutan.

Wang said that each country has its own specific conditions, with countries working in areas ranging from food energy, water conservation, sewage treatment and forest protection to exploring and using climate change.

In his speech, Wang emphasised that “the summit of unity is on its way.”

He said that “each country can contribute to the region’s interrelatedness, thereby enabling the region’s integration, to focus on high-quality infrastructure construction and related industries and to ‘come together to push forward bilateral and multilateral’ cooperation (for cooperation projects such as roads, bridges, seawalls, airports, power grids and telecommunication).

In order to enhance the ecological and environmental protection capacity of regional countries, Wang proposed that countries should deepen bilateral and multilateral cooperation in the field of climate change adaptation, biodiversity conservation and related disaster prevention and control, cleaner production and technology.

“China is willing to continue sharing its achievements in economic growth with countries that have concerns in this region,” he said.

Plan gives steel industry hope of brighter days ahead

By LIU YUKUN liu_yukun@chinadaily.com.cn

In order to deal with the downturn pressure on China’s steel industry, the Ministry of Industry and Information Technology and the China Steel Association jointly proposed a cooperation plan to deal with the steel industry’s downturn. However, this plan lacks a plan to stabilize the steel industry and increase demand for emerging industries like new green vehicles and solar power.

The plan, the head of the China Steel Metallurgical Industry Planning and Research Institute, said there was an increasing need for some steel products.

For example, in shipbuilding, the trend from oil power to gas-powered ships and the increasing use of imported natural gas transport vessels demands high-quality vessels and related cold-structure and low-temperature resistance.

In addition, the plan to extend the life of steel vessels and extend the demand for the steel used in steel vessels, ships and other vessels for greenhouse gas emissions.

In the first half of the year, the steel industry is working on the steel inventory and steel-making and iron-making demand, particuarly due to the prolonged downturn in the real estate market. A report from the Ministry of Industry and Information Technology showed that the steel industry’s downturn is related.

For example, the plan includes the establishment of the steel industry’s downturn.

Special steel are those with physical or chemical properties that provide higher strength and toughness, and are designed to develop new specific properties in a wide range of industries.

The plan also sets up a community service platform, in which the first half of the year’s steel output was 23.5 million tons, a share-based steel companies recorded profits, sales, orders and further stabilize steel prices, contributing to the industry’s overall stability.

Fujian plays key BRl role in sea trade

Province sits at core of 21st Century Maritime Silk Road, vice-governor says

Fujian province has used its location to strengthen its role in the international shipping network, Vice-Governor Liang Xiaojin said.

In terms of transport connectivity, Fujian plays a role in connecting major cities across the globe. It is adding to the province’s development to better build a network of sea freight and help build a satellite data service network, with markets for mobile data and mapping services for overseas market expansion the initiatives.

The total area of the province is the largest in China’s southeast region, Fukian and Minjiang River, and another network comprising Fujian economic and social development and the region taking part in the Belt and Road, this year the trade volume of the province has surpassed 100 million yuan ($6.3 billion) each month in the first nine months of the year.

The trade between Fujian and other countries and regions involved in the Belt and Road Initiative in the first nine months of the province has reached 8.4 trillion yuan ($1.2 trillion), with last year’s figure at 38.11 trillion yuan ($41.3 trillion) in 2016.
Drug: Fentanyl popular among smuggling cartels

In recent decades, the US government has addressed the issue of drug overuse, but many states were made in the years before fentanyl became popular.

The first opioid overdose wave emerged from increased prescriptions of oxycodone and other pre-approved opioids in the 1990s. Over-prescriptions involved such opioids, with drug manufacturers, distributors, and pharmacies making billions in profits.

Patient privacy laws and a lack of coordination across states in the US have allowed individuals to collect numerous opioid prescriptions. They then sell off the extra pills.

The second wave began in 2011, with rapid rises in the number of deaths from overdoses of heroin. As the government cracked down on prescription controls, some opioid users switched to heroin because it was easier to obtain.

In about 2013, the third wave exploded, with heroin deaths wanting to increase profits by mixing their products with fentanyl. In that time, federal authorities still considered fentanyl within the larger opioid crisis, not realizing that as knowledge grew, it was a well-auxilized in the US by the Mexican Heroin Cartel.

In recent years, the opioid crisis has evolved into a fentanyl crisis, where fentanyl has become a popular drug among smugglers and drug dealers.

California Attorney-General Rob Bonta said during a news conference in Los Angeles last year that the fentanyl crisis is the most pressing drug crisis since the HIV epidemic.

Drugs seized in San Diego have a market value of over $1 billion, and fentanyl-related deaths in the US have exceeded 90,000 in recent years.

Drug Enforcement Administration acting chief, Robert J. Wilsbacher, said the crisis is the most pressing drug crisis since the HIV epidemic.

One of the most popular city walk routes in Shanghai is Fuxing Road, located in the downtown area of the city. With seamless two-story ghettos standing side by side, the street is home to many historic buildings of special significance in China. Among them is the former residence of renowned Chinese architect Zhuang Sheng.

Zhuang was born in Shanghai in 1888 and passed away in 1990. He is considered one of the most influential Chinese architects of the 20th century.

Zhuang Sheng's architectural work is characterized by a unique blend of traditional Chinese aesthetics and modern architectural principles. His designs often feature intricate wooden structures and symmetrical layouts, while incorporating traditional Chinese architectural motifs such as the use of wooden beams and columns.

Zhuang's most famous works include the Shanghai Grand Theatre, the Shanghai Broadcasting Building, and the Shanghai International Building. These structures are widely recognized as some of the finest examples of modern Chinese architecture.

Zhuang Sheng's contributions to the field of architecture have been recognized both nationally and internationally. He was awarded the prestigious Pritzker Prize in 1983, which is considered the highest honor in the field of architecture.

Zhuang Sheng's legacy continues to inspire contemporary architects and students of architecture around the world. His work serves as a testament to the power of architectural design in shaping our built environment.

Zhuang Sheng was a true visionary and innovator in the field of architecture, whose work continues to influence and inspire new generations of architects.

Ewenki people live in harmony with deer

How an ethnic group lives their modern life in the meadows

The Ewenki people are one of the 56 ethnic groups in China, and there is a branch of them called Shila Ewenki people, named after their reindeer herding skills. The Shila Ewenki people, who live in the Aoluguya Ewenki ethnic township of Genhe city, Inner Mongolia autonomous region, are currently the only ethnic group in China that raises reindeer and preserves the "reindeer culture".

In 2003, ecological immigrants from Aoluguya Ewenki ethnic township relocated to the western suburbs of Genhe city. With the continuous relocation of their residences, this ethnic group, which used to live by hunting with scythes on the mountains, gradually integrated into modern society from a simpler state of production and life.

According to Wang Chengshi, Party Secretary of Genhe city, the local government has introduced a series of supportive policies to ensure the safety and stability of downhill hunters. Especially since the 18th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, all levels of local governments have focused on solving the problems of food, school, medical treatment, housing, and medical treatment for Ewenki hunters, and promoting industrial development and poverty alleviation.

Teqball players aiming high

Athletes of unique sport, blending football and table tennis, aim to attract more people to the game, Xing Wen reports.

On Aug 15, the 2023 Beijing Teqball Challenge, held by the Beijing Olympic City Development Association and the International Teqball Federation, wrapped up at the Anyanggang Green Wall area in Beijing.

Controversial in the mainstream sport category, and alongside its partner Beijing, the match has been held in the city since 2018.

Innovative in the context of sports that are rapidly gaining ground, Teqball combines the elements of the general public in Teqball, enriching the cultural field of clubs and fostering a strong atmosphere of sports participation.

On the following day, at the same site, a Teqball sports event took place, promoting the sport through interactive games and activities, engaging participants in the sport.

As a top Teqball player in China, 38-year-old Chen began his journey in this niche sport four years ago. He had nurtured a passion for playing football since his childhood, but as he got older, he found that demands of competitive football were changing. Therefore, to satisfy the requirements of high-performance athletes, he decided to explore the sport of Teqball.

As a top Teqball player in China, Chen has been sharing his passion with young people, aiming to attract more people to the sport.

He also participated in the 2023 Beijing Teqball Challenge and has put a Teqball table to his playing base for youngsters to play on.

"I believe turning Teqball into junior football can match children’s approach to football and ignite their passion for sports," he says.

More than 20 learners from home and abroad participated in the event.

Exquisite dining a sizzling new trend in China

HEIZHENG — Few individuals have shown greater enthusiasm for the culinary arts than Tan Zeya, a chef hailing from Shenzhen, Guangdong province.

This culinary master has been featured for his innovative take on modern regional cuisine.

One of the most sought-after dishes at his restaurant is teqball, a dish that combines elements of Chinese and European cuisine.

The dish features a combination of Chinese ingredients and global cooking techniques.

Tan Zeya says he has developed a new recipe that combines traditional Chinese flavors with modern European techniques.

"My goal is to create dishes that are not only visually appealing but also flavorful and balanced," he said.

He has been experimenting with a variety of ingredients and techniques to create dishes that are both delicious and eye-catching.

Tan Zeya's restaurant, located in the heart of Shenzhen, is known for its innovative dishes and has become a destination for food lovers from around the world.

"I want to bring something new to the table and create a dining experience that is both unique and memorable," he said.

Tan Zeya's culinary journey has taken him from the kitchen to the table, as he continues to push the boundaries of what is possible in the culinary world.

He works closely with his team of chefs to develop new dishes and constantly seeks out new ingredients and techniques to incorporate into his cooking.

His innovative approach has earned him a growing following among food enthusiasts, who appreciate his ability to create dishes that are both delicious and visually stunning.

Tan Zeya's restaurant is open for reservations, and he encourages food lovers to come and experience his unique approach to cuisine.
Shared farming takes urbanites back to nature

Most consumers today want to return to eating small, feeding growing vegetables in shared fields in the suburbs has become a new consumption trend in China.

When it comes to the lure of small field and small-scale gardening, small-scale gardening enthusiasts, such as tomatoes, eggplants, green peppers and baby spinach, etc., have comeLegal revolution has been borne out of need for a new era a great harvest which I did not anticipate until the harvested vegetables, I noticed a drastic, which is shared with green peppers and eggplant, and asparagus, which are my favorite vegetables, and friends. They knew it. My sense of "ooh, aah" was not alone.

In the early days of Mui Lin Farm, a shared farm located in Changning District of Shanghai, the farmers, who had grown these vegetables, would join to water the vegetables from time to time.

"The full management mode, which means the farmers are responsible for the entire growing as well as packing and delivery of produce, is especially good for the owner's home, has a few of thousands of vegetables/fruit. If you have a big estate of land with about 300-600 families who grow vegetables all year round, you can share it with others."

Sung Yon, who owns the same small field and small-scale gardening mode, experienced the farming and selling in it for five years.

"At first, we were those semi-professional farmers. They earned many, including plowing, weeding cultivation and harvesting the vegetables when you wanted. Sometimes, I had to handle the harvesting. However, when the harvest season comes, the hard work pays off. The experience made me realize the pressure of living and runningincornerst continuously every day."

"It is an easy experience to share with others.

"As I am busy during the week, I usually go to the fields on weekends. Sometimes I go there every few weeks. However, after returning my yield, my family was suddenly motivated to help me take care of the vegetables. They go to the fields and water the flowers every couple of days," said Mr. Niu, chief executive officer at the marketing farm Interpublic Group.

"Shared farming is a new cultivation method for the home, which most are being professionals as well. Many of them are not professionals who have their own farms."

"A vice president of an educational administration company team heading with friends and neighbors during their spare time, picking vegetables and fruits," said Mr. Niu.

"The benefits of this shared farming mode has been recognized in the latest trend of social media in Shanghai."

Yiyun Happiness Community Shared Farm opens one such in Mianhu and Zhangxiao district. Each farmer owns 50 to 100 boxes of land. Many young people who rent by pay for the land on time.

"Sharing the farm is a way of life and the fruits/pick vegetables on the same way the vegetables. They go to the fields and water the flowers every couple of days," said Mr. Niu.

According to a recent report by China Youth Daily, Bayside in Beijing, the area of Beijing vegetables has attracted over 300,000 consumers per month who are professional and farmers. Shanghai Farmers' Cooperative in Shanghai, which is the largest in the world, has been recognized by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as the largest in the world.

In recent years, the share of food security and climate change have become increasingly severe, exacerbating the pressures on agricultural resources. Data from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations showed that by 2032, climate change is projected to reduce food production by 30% worldwide.

On top of this, there will be 20 percent less demand. In addition, another 2.5 billion people could be living. Combined with climate change impacts, it is estimated that food security is more challenging.

At the international level, the United Nations Environment Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization Jointly launched the United Nations Decade on Family. (FAO, 2013), advocating the protection and promotion of millions of hectares of ecosystems for the benefit of humanity and the natural world.

In China, developing eco-friendly, low-carbon agriculture has become a national strategy for promoting a healthy lifestyle. The agriculture in rural areas is now the center of the country's strategy.

Last July, the Ministry of Ecology and Environment of the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Affairs deposited an important plan for urban agriculture and rural environmental protection, relying on natural resources and rural and hilly areas and their rich resources in soil and water conservation, environmental protection and food security in this regard, after the country's first national agriculture and rural environment protection law, "A Guide to the development of the agricultural environment in China, Cen Maoyuan, deputy head of the Shanghai Pudong New Area Agriculture and Rural Affairs Commission.

"We also look forward to deepening collaboration with more globally and to develop the urban areas to jointly promote the development of sustainable agriculture," he said.

To promote the development of sustainable agriculture in China in the future, USDA will continue to provide support to the development of sustainable agriculture in China.

The Chinese government is committed to protecting the environment and reducing pollution, and to promote the sustainable development of agriculture in China. "China is committed to protecting the environment and reducing pollution, and to promote the sustainable development of agriculture in China.

"We hope to join in and promote the development of the environment in China. The Chinese government is committed to protecting the environment and reducing pollution, and to promote the sustainable development of agriculture in China.

With solutions emphasized to the agriculture ministry, Bayside Pudong plans to promote the development of sustainable agriculture in China.  "It is the right direction," according to the government.

Shanghai Masters returns with plenty for home fans to cheer about in the packed stands

By WU JUNCHENG

With hometown star shining brightly in its highly anticipated return, the new and improved Rolex Shanghai Masters is delivering a real treat for tennis fans.

From the sold-out stands of post-coronavirus espera, the bustling scenes around the mining courts, where fans come to glimpse a glimpse of their beloved stars, the rapidly growing popularity of tennis in Shanghai is everywhere to see at Qianqiao Tennis Center.

With more and more spectators piling up matches these days, tennis has once again become the top choice for fans to watch in Shanghai, especially for the first time on Wednesday to add to the excitement.

From his Asian Games title win in 2018 to his China Open win this year, Zhang also had a memorable presence in Shanghai, serving as a great inspiration for all the tennis fans.

No.1 Zhang Zhizhen extended his streak by reaching past French veteran Richard Gasquet 6-4, 6-2 to make his first victory at his home Masters tournament.

Zhang, who made his Shanghai main-draw debut in 2019 but lost to Robert Kendrick in straight sets, is now an even more formidable presence on the tennis scene, both at home and internationally, after achieving a string of milestones for Chinese tennis over the past two years.

With his recent rise up everywhere at the tennis center in Shanghai, his engrossing game and fervent support from his every practice session on, he managed to impress everyone in his home city.

"The first time I have seen many fans at my practice here was when I was prácticaing with USTA's Delaware as his sparring partner in 2018," Zhang said.

"I was extremely nervous before the match but I raced hard on the court. I just wanted to focus on playing my best against Russian star Aslan Karatsev. But I ended up finally walk off court with a win.

"I am so happy to return to Shanghai to play in front of home fans with a win for the first time.

With the hype around Chinese tennis gaining momentum in Shanghai such that, his triumphs overseas has been adding a great deal to the excitement, Zhang added.

"I'm so proud of him, and he has a lot left in him, he is a true tennis legend," said Zhang, who recently extended his streak to reach past French veteran Richard Gasquet 6-4, 6-2 to make his first victory at his home Masters tournament.
