Hello,

The COP30 Presidency emphasizes the vital role of faith communities to help ensure that people remain the focus of climate discussions.

Along these lines, Fé no Clima 2025, an interfaith gathering at the Memorial dos Povos Indígenas in Brasília, has just brought together religious leaders, Indigenous Peoples, youth, scientists, and civil society to reaffirm spirituality as a driving force for climate justice and regeneration.

Below please find a statement from the COP30 Presidency detailing the importance of this gathering.

We would be happy to answer any additional questions should you be interested.

Best,

Statement from the COP30 Presidency:

COP30 welcomes all voices as a profound expression of the Global Ethical Stocktake, affirming that climate action must begin and end with people. Faith leaders, Indigenous Peoples, youth, scientists, and civil society must collectively join together to recognize spirituality as a powerful force for regeneration, resilience and climate justice. As we build a just, humane, and regenerative future, COP30 reaffirms the indispensable role of faith communities in restoring the bonds between humanity and planet. The Global Ethical Stocktake must be our compass for accelerating the implementation of the Paris Agreement and making COP30 a turning point for climate action.
