Question 12

Political activities on behalf of the Republic of Kosova in the former Yugoslavia and the Muslim National Council of Sanjak, also part of former Yugoslavia (June 1, 1996-November 30, 1996)

Ruder Finn has represented the Government of Kosova for four years. It began its representational work for the Muslim National Council of Sanjak during this reporting cycle. Both groups have suffered systematic repression and persecution at the hands of the Serbian government in Belgrade. Both groups sought counsel in order to focus world attention on the horrific conditions imposed by the Serbs against the ethnic Albanians of Kosova and the Bosniac peoples of Sanjak.

During this four-year period, Ruder Finn has worked with the Republic of Kosova to publicize its peaceful struggle to oppose Serbian aggression and brutality against its majority Albanian population. Goals of the program have been to: halt the "ethnic cleansing" practices of the Serbs by returning international monitors to Kosova; end the demilitarization of Kosova; permit the freely elected Parliament of Kosova to meet in Prishtina free from intimidation and harassment by Serbian oppressors; return sacked Albanian employees to their jobs; and continue economic sanctions against Serbia until there is a resolution of the Kosova issue.

Key elements of Ruder Finn's work during this reporting cycle were to manage media activities relating to the formal opening of a USIA Cultural Office in Prishtina; work with key Congressional contacts to pass a Congressional resolution on Kosova that calls for the appointment of a special envoy to help resolve the crisis; maintenance of the so-called "outer wall" of sanctions against Serbia until there is a resolution of the crisis; and continued humanitarian assistance funding of projects in Kosova.

Ruder Finn continued its daily monitoring of major national newspapers and magazines, network and cable televisions and worldwide computerized wire services. As needed, relevant articles were faxed to the Kosova leaders' list and to other interested parties such as congressional staff and public policy groups seeking information on the subject. The Kosova InfoFAX was also written and distributed to our computerized list of 300 carefully targeted Members of Congress, Clinton Administration officials, representatives of the U.S. and U.N. diplomatic corps, international journalists, columnists and commentators, and Albanian-American leaders. A total of 6 InfoFAXES were distributed during this period.

Other activities during this period included producing background materials for distribution to target audiences, responding to news media inquiries about the situation in Kosova and all logistical arrangements for a brief U.S. visit by Prime Minister Bukoshi in June.

Throughout this period, Ruder Finn maintained routine contact with Congressional leaders on Kosova, providing information when necessary, facilitating communication among offices, and utilizing its network to support Congressional initiatives.

In the words of Kosova President Ibrahim Rugova 1996 was "an historic year" in large part because of the opening of the U.S. Cultural Office in Kosova. Clearly, the focus of Ruder Finn's work during this cycle was the formal opening ceremonies for the office on July 20, 1996. Long-sought by Kosova government leaders and Congressional advocates on Capitol Hill, the office represented a tremendous symbolic victory in demonstrating visible U.S. support in the capital of Albanian Kosova.

Ruder Finn utilized its network of Kosova supporters on Capitol Hill to help identify and contact key Members of Congress and their staff to encourage participation in a visit to Prishtina to formally open the USIA office. Congressman Eliot Engel (D-NY) and four Congressional staff attended the ceremonies. Ruder Finn was charged with handling media activities associated with the opening of the office, and utilized the Congressional visit to maximize media coverage of the event. A major story resulting from the visit appeared in the Sunday, July 21st edition of the Washington Post. Reporting from the scene, the Post reporter said that "the scene outside the U.S. information office center ... illustrated the complexities of politics in this part of the world and the influence the United States is capable of wielding, when it chooses to do so."

On his return from Kosova, Congressman Engel's resolution (H.Con.Res. 155) calling for improvement in the human rights situation in Kosova, the return of international monitors, retention of the "outer wall" of sanctions, and the appointment of a special envoy to address the Kosova crisis was passed by the House of Representatives.

Ruder Finn also managed the visit of Kosova Prime Minister Bujar Bukoshi to Washington, D.C. on June 17-19, 1996. During this brief visit meetings were arranged with Richard Schifter, Special Assistant to the President and Counselor, National Security Council; Rudolph Perina, Senior Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European and Canadian Affairs, and John Price, Desk Officer for Serbia and Montenegro. Press interviews with CNN International and the Associated Press were also scheduled.

Through its InfoFAX distribution system Ruder Finn reported on the signing of an education agreement between the Serbian President and President Rugova -- an agreement that, if implemented, could pave the way for the return of Albanian students to schools and the human rights report issued in November by Special Rapporteur of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, Elizabeth Rehn. Ms. Rehn, as well as other observers of the Kosova scene, have expressed their concern that little progress has been made to implement the education agreement.

While 1996 was an historic year for the people of Kosova, conditions remain dangerous, possibly explosive, and the future very much in doubt. Because of the consistency of effort led by a bi-partisan Congressional coalition on Capitol Hill, the government of Kosova is well-positioned to pursue its message in the United States and within the international community that there can be no lasting peace in the Balkans until there is peace in Kosova.

Ruder Finn was also retained this past year to represent the Muslim National Council of Sanjak, a multi-party umbrella organization representing the Bosniac (Muslim) peoples of the Sanjak region of former Yugoslavia. Sanjak is a small region of Yugoslavia, some 8,687 square kilometers, bordered on one side by Bosnia and Kosova on the other. Two-thirds, or 350,000, of its population is Bosniac -- people who have historically maintained strong ties to Bosnia.

Throughout its history, Sanjak has been subjected to a deliberate, premeditated campaign of brutality and repression at the hands of the Serbs and Montenegrins. Conditions became much worse under the Milosevic regime, where ethnic cleansing, harassment of political leaders, destruction of homes, churches, and property, and other forms of human rights abuses became an every day occurrence.

Ruder Finn was asked by the Council (MNC) to launch a public awareness campaign to focus U.S. and world attention on the problems facing Sanjak as peace efforts in the Balkans virtually ignored their plight. The target audience was U.S. policy-makers in Congress, the Administration, the diplomatic community in Washington and at the United Nations, public policy groups, and the media.

To communicate with this diverse audience, Ruder Finn designed the Sanjak FAXAlert, in a news bulletin format, which was disseminated on a regular basis to a targeted list of approximately 350 key individuals within the above-mentioned categories. The FAXAlert contains timely coverage of people and events occurring within Sanjak as well as current news that may have an impact on the region. A total of 12 FAXAlerts were written and distributed during this reporting cycle.

Three distinct projects were implemented on behalf of the client during this six-month reporting period, with the goal of increasing public awareness of Sanjak and the unique circumstances facing the Bosniac people of Sanjak. Ruder Finn prepared a series of background papers for distribution to the target audiences and managed all of the Congressional and media relations activities associated with each project.

Specific objectives of the program were captured in a 10-point action plan that was shared with target audiences. Key policies within the action plan included: retention of the outer wall of sanctions; return of OSCE monitors to Sanjak; improvement in the human rights conditions for the Bosniac people; and a guarantee of safe return for elected Sanjak leaders.

The program was launched in late July (July 28-August 5, 1996) with the visit of the President of the Muslim National Council, Dr. Sulejman Ugljanin and his delegation to the United States. At that time, Dr. Ugljanin was living in exile for fear of arrest should he return to his homeland in Sanjak. Ruder Finn managed the entire visit: preparation of the itinerary; scheduling of appointments; coordination of media; and accompanying delegation to all meetings. Meetings were scheduled in Washington, D.C. and New York with the following individuals and/or organizations:

ADMINISTRATION:	Jim Bigus, Dept. of State
CONGRESS:	Congressman Eliot Engel (D.-NY) Congressman Jim Moran (D-VA) Congressman John Porter (R-IL) Staff from the following offices: -- Senate Foreign Relations -- Congresswoman Susan Molinari -- Senator Richard Lugar -- Helsinki Commission
DIPLOMATIC:	Ambassador Alkalaj, Bosnian Embassy Ambassador Kulla, U.N., Albanian Mission Ambassador Sacirbey, U.N., Bosnia Mission Ambassador Peyrovi, OIC, NY. Herve Ladsous, U.N., French Mission Ambassador Agam, U.N., Malaysia Mission Ambassador Henze, U.N., Germany Yvette Wong, U.N., U.S. Mission
MEDIA:	Reuters Voice of America Newsday Wall Street Journal United Nations Press Conference
ORGANIZATIONS:	American Muslim Council Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Org. Human Rights Watch

The visit achieved its principal goal of focusing attention on Sanjak as an important element in the overall solution to the Balkan conflict. A major story about Sanjak appeared in The Wall Street Journal that was in turn distributed to offices on Capitol. As a result of Congressional meetings, key members expressed their willingness to draft a resolution specific to the circumstances in Sanjak and to hold a briefing of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus. That decision led to the second project.

On September 12, 1996, the Congressional Human Rights Caucus scheduled its briefing: "The Sanjak Region: Unknown Ethnic Battleground in the Balkans." Ruder Finn worked with Congressional staff to suggest witnesses for the hearing, drafted the statement delivered by the Muslim National Council representative, Bajram Omeragic, and prepared graphic information boards for use at the hearing.

Omeragic's statement described conditions in Sanjak and called for U.S. leadership to include resolution of Sanjak's status as part of an overall settlement of the Balkans conflict. He also alerted the committee to Dr. Ugljanin's decision to return to Sanjak to prepare for and participate in Serbian federal elections in November -- a risky decision given that Serbian authorities held a warrant for his arrest .

During his September visit, Ruder Finn arranged for Omeragic to meet with a staff representative of Senator Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) as well as media interviews with the Associated Press, Washington Post and Washington Times.

Following the hearing, Congressmen Moran, Porter, and Lantos introduced H.Con.Res. 217, a resolution specifically targeted to the situation in Sanjak.

The third major project for the year was to alert media to cover Ugljanin's return to Belgrade and then Sanjak in late September. The client sought substantial coverage in order to deter Serb authorities from harassing him upon his return. Ruder Finn contacted over 50 key Belgrade and international media to cover his arrival. Dr. Ugljanin returned to Sanjak without incident and successfully led his party to victories in the November federal elections in Serbia.

During this reporting cycle, Ruder Finn also used its network of contacts in the NGO community to facilitate communication between Sanjak officials and humanitarian organizations seeking to provide assistance to refugee families in the region. In November we learned that Mercy Corps received grants from the U.S. Agency for International Development to carry out a winterization program and distribution of bulk food to refugee families in Sanjak.

This was a particularly busy period for work with Sanjak, but the problems facing this small Balkan region are now clearly before public policy makers at a critical time when the international community broadens its efforts beyond the conflict in Bosnia.
