Target Selection

Saudi Arabia has taken several steps to create a more thorough vetting process for target selection and validation for the Saudi-led Coalition’s operations in Yemen. This process is meant to ensure that the Coalition:

- Adheres to the Law of Armed Conflict;
- Expands the 'No Strike List' now at over 33,000 targets;
- Enhances target criteria such as Damage Assessment and Collateral Damage Estimates;
- Observes the implementation of stricter Rules of Engagement.

The Coalition has implemented additional vetting criteria for time-sensitive targets. These criteria place extra responsibilities on Coalition pilots before conducting a mission.

The Coalition adheres to a no-strike list that includes over 33,000 targets, as referenced above. This list includes locations provided by U.N. and other humanitarian organizations on the ground in Yemen, in addition to locations collected by the Coalition. Furthermore, the Coalition is constantly updating this list and adding locations to it.

Currently, the Coalition seeks to align its targeting practices and personnel training with NATO standards, and only personnel that meet these rigorous standards are involved in target selection.
U.S. Cooperation

Additionally, the Coalition is in regular consultation with the United States government regarding U.S. assistance in the vetting process. Saudi Arabia and the Coalition welcome the opportunity to grant access to U.S. personnel to the Air Operations Center, and any other facilities where targeting is approved, to observe the decision-making process implementation of such procedures.

The Coalition believes that increased U.S. support for coalition operations, including assistance in vetting targets, will increase the effectiveness of operations, and more importantly reduce mistakes.

Investigations: The Coalition has implemented recommendations of the Joint Incident Assessment Team (JIAT), which is responsible for investigating any incidents where it is alleged that Coalition operations have targeted civilians. The JIAT’s findings have been made public. The aforementioned steps were largely instituted based on JIAT recommendations.

President Hadi stated that Yemen would have fallen in four days and would have been an Iranian state had it not been for the Operation Decisive Storm launched by the Arab military coalition under the leadership of Saudi Arabia.
Executive Summary

Yemen has experienced political turmoil and a climate of lawlessness for decades. In recent years, however, Iran’s covert support for a Yemeni faction exacerbated existing divisions and triggered a political and economic crisis that led to the violent ouster of President Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi in 2015. As Yemen found itself on the brink of civil war, an international coalition led by Saudi Arabia and supported by the United States intervened. Its objectives were to protect the civilian population from attacks by Iranian-supported Houthi militias, restore the legitimate government and prevent Yemen from becoming a safe haven for Al-Qaeda and a base for Iranian adventurism and subversion in the region.

Saudi Arabia and the states of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) began an intense diplomatic effort aimed at avoiding civil war in Yemen when nationwide protests began in February 2011. Saudi Arabia helped to broker the departure of Yemen’s longtime leader, Ali Abdullah Saleh, and the formation of a National Unity government. It also promoted a United Nations-led National Dialogue among all political factions and free elections in 2012 in which Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi was elected president. This period of optimism was cut short by repeated attempts by the Houthis to sabotage the nation-building process, at first by political obstruction, and then by military means.

The root causes of the conflict in Yemen are complex. The al Houthi family and the political-rebel movement whose adherents collectively refer to themselves by “the Houthis” have waged a decade-long campaign to achieve political power by military force. This campaign of aggression has aggravated longstanding divisions and produced attacks on both fellow Yemenis and Saudi civilians across the border. Their insurgency against Yemen’s central government has been aided by the financial and operational support of Iran’s Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) and Lebanon’s Hezbollah militia.
Iran's interference in Yemen is of a piece with its activities in Lebanon, Iraq, and elsewhere, and Iranian involvement has escalated in Yemen as the conflict wore on. Indeed, upon the capture of the Yemeni capital, Sana'a by the Houthis in 2014, a prominent Iranian government official boasted that Iran now controls four Arab capitals, with Sana'a joining Beirut, Baghdad and Damascus. Iran has smuggled weapons into Yemen, in violation of an arms embargo imposed by the United Nations Security Council, that have been used to attack Saudi, U.S. and Emirati ships off the Yemeni coast and civilians in Saudi Arabia. Major General Qassem Soleimani, commander of the Qods Force—the external arm of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps—met top IRGC officials in Tehran in February 2017 to evaluate plans that would further advantage the Houthis in Yemen. A senior Iranian official told Reuters, “Yemen is where the real proxy war is going on, and winning the battle in Yemen will help define the balance of power in the Middle East.”

As President Hadi sought to draft a constitution that could represent the interests of all Yemenis and capitalize on the achievements of a political transition endorsed by the United Nations, former president Saleh found common cause with Iran and its Houthi allies, who sought to unilaterally redraw Yemen’s internal boundaries in their favor. The Houthis resisted repeated diplomatic efforts by multilateral organizations to find a political solution. As violence escalated, the international community expressed grave concern at the prospect of a coup d'état by an Iranian-backed extremist militia that had already violently occupied several cities, seized government posts, and bombed the Presidential Palace.

It was successive Houthi military offensives throughout 2014 and 2015 that finally provoked the Hadi government to request the intervention of what was to become the Saudi-led coalition. Military action was based upon the principle of self-defense contained in Article 51 of the UN Charter. Preventing Houthi control of Yemen and protecting Yemen’s neighbors from the Houthis’ arsenal of ballistic weapons, tanks and other advanced military equipment was essential to the national security of Saudi Arabia and other GCC nations.

As part of the effort to restore the legitimate government of Yemen, Saudi Arabia and its Coalition partners have also degraded the ability of Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and Daesh (ISIS) to use Yemeni territory as a safe haven. AQAP terrorists have exploited the security vacuum that followed the Houthi assault on Sana’a in September 2014, and expanded their presence in the countryside, specifically Yemen’s southern and eastern regions. In April 2015, AQAP fighters attacked and occupied the strategic port city of Mukalla, which was subsequently liberated by Yemeni armed forces, in collaboration with Saudi and Emirati special forces. Today, AQAP does not control a single city in Yemen. In November 2014, Daesh established a foothold in Yemen and began to directly target Coalition forces in Yemen in response to the Kingdom’s coordinated efforts to degrade the terror group’s operational bases in Syria.

Saudi Arabia remains committed to a peaceful, diplomatic and multilateral solution to the crisis in Yemen. Saudi Arabia supports the UN-led efforts to achieve a political solution in Yemen based upon UNSC Resolution 2216, the GCC initiative, and the outcomes of the National Dialogue. Although military intervention in Yemen was necessary to prevent Yemen’s collapse, the solution to the country’s conflict will be political: the formation of a new national unity government, with power shared among the parties. Such a unity government would respect the sanctity of international borders, ensure Yemen’s territorial integrity, and prohibit the deployment of weapons from Yemeni territory that threaten international waterways or the security of Yemen’s neighbors.

A stable, prosperous and self-governing Yemen free of foreign influence and transnational terrorist organizations is within reach. As the single-largest donor of humanitarian aid to Yemen, the Kingdom has committed to play a substantial role in future reconstruction efforts.
Left unchecked, the Houthi militias, backed by Iran, would have taken control of Yemen—along with its military arsenal of ballistic weapons, tanks and other advanced military equipment—and turned those weapons on its neighbors.
Following are the achievements in the campaign against Iran-backed Houthi separatists as well as against the terrorist organizations in Yemen:

Improved Containment of Iranian Influence on the Arabian Peninsula

After the fall of the legitimate Yemeni government at the beginning of 2015 because of the Houthi offensive, Iran sought to provide the Houthis with political and financial support. The Houthis subsequently became the single largest militia force in the country, and were particularly strong in north and central Yemen. The Houthis were then able to direct significant violence at Saudi targets: In July 2015, Houthi military units shelled Saudi military sites in Jizan Province. Between May 2015 and January 27, 2017, the Kingdom intercepted more than 40 missiles launched at Saudi territory from Yemen, nine of these missiles have struck Saudi territory. A convoy of Iranian ships headed to the Gulf of Aden in March 2016 carrying weapons to that group's militia was intercepted by U.S. naval vessels responding to Saudi Arabia's request. Saudi intervention has stalled Iranian ambitions to turn Yemen into a proxy-state and Houthi militias into another Hezbollah.

Substantial Eradication of Houthi-led Separatism

Houthi rebels participated in the Yemeni national dialogue and agreed to its outcomes. The Houthis, however, reneged in their commitments and launched a military offensive occupying the city of Amran in the summer of 2014 and the capital of Sana’a in September 2014. Saudi Arabia’s intervention, done as a response to a request by the legitimate government of Yemen, prevented the fall of Aden and supported the legitimate government in regaining control over more than 85 percent of Yemen’s territory.

Erosion of Religious Extremism

Left unchecked, Yemen’s political power struggle and resulting civil war would have left that country more vulnerable to the violent influence of terror groups already inflaming the region.

Reduction of Aggression Against Yemen’s Civilian Population

Over the course of the war, Houthis have bombed civilians on the ground, used child soldiers, and withheld humanitarian food assistance as a means of intimidation. In Taiz, where the Houthis used such brutal tactics against civilians, Saudi Arabia dropped food and medicine to relieve the siege against the city.

Resumption of Humanitarian Assistance

Saudi Arabia has been able to extend significant humanitarian support to help ameliorate the suffering of a population that was devastated by internal conflict long before Riyadh’s decision to intervene. The Kingdom has been the single largest donor of humanitarian aid to Yemen, contributing more than $847 million during the conflict. In April 2015, responding to an appeal by the United Nations, the Kingdom gave $274 million to support UN efforts in Yemen, and then announced in May that it would supply an additional $267 million in assistance. Such aid is not new: Riyadh pledged $3 billion to help Yemen implement reforms against poverty and hunger in 2012 and donated millions of barrels of crude oil and petroleum products to assist with Yemen’s energy needs that year and beyond.

Thwarting the Menace of Al-Qaeda and the Rise of Daesh

Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), cited by the U.S. State Department in 2014 as the greatest threat to Saudi internal security, sought to exploit the Yemen civil war for its own objectives, including suicide bombings that targeted Saudi and Western nationals. Daesh has penetrated Yemen, having carried out car bombings, attacks on mosques, and grisly executions that claimed more than 130 lives by the end of December 2015. Terrorist strongholds have subsequently been liberated by Coalition forces.

Diplomatic Efforts

Saudi Arabia, the GCC, G10 countries and the Special Representative of the UN Secretary General have worked diplomatically to seek a peaceful transition of government. In 2011, political parties in Yemen agreed to accept the GCC Initiative. However, while Riyadh and President Hadi have sought compromise with Houthi forces—including parliamentary representation and greater autonomy within Yemen’s provinces—the Houthis chose to attempt to win territory through military action. Today, diplomatic efforts are mainly UN-led with the political support of Saudi Arabia, the GCC and the international community. The Kingdom and its Coalition partners continue to prevent further destabilization and create a more hospitable climate for negotiations.

Left unchecked, the Houthi militias, backed by Iran, would have taken control of Yemen—along with its military arsenal of ballistic weapons, tanks and other advanced military equipment—and turned those weapons on its neighbors. Saudi Arabia continues to work toward a peaceful solution that maintains the integrity and independence of Yemen. Saudi Arabia is committed to providing the financial support necessary to rebuild Yemen and improve the quality of life for all Yemenis. Without Saudi involvement, Yemen’s conflict could have produced unacceptable consequences for regional and international security.
Saudi Arabia’s intervention, done at the request of the legitimate government of Yemen, prevented the fall of Aden and has successfully restored legitimate government control to more than 85 percent of Yemen’s territory.
Strategic Interests in Yemen

The strategic interest of Saudi Arabia in securing stability in Yemen and in maintaining the legitimate, popularly-elected national government of President Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi is four-fold: securing Saudi Arabia's border, stemming Iran's regional expansionist ambitions, combating terrorist threats and safeguarding regional security.

Many of Saudi Arabia's strategic interests in seeing stability in Yemen are in line with international priorities in the region. In particular, with respect to fighting terrorism, containing Iranian aggression, and promoting regional stability and cooperation, the interests of the United States and Saudi Arabia run parallel.

Combating Iran-backed Houthi violence directed against the Yemeni population and, by extension, against Saudi Arabia is the first strategic priority of the Kingdom. Saudi Arabia has endured unprovoked attacks towards its Jizan Province, Houthi ballistic missile attacks against civilians, and attacks against Saudi border security forces. To date, Houthi separatists have attempted more than 40 missile strikes against Saudi Arabia from the Yemen border and coastal territories, with nine such attempts striking Saudi land.

Secondly, Saudi Arabia's interest in quelling this conflict also includes thwarting the geopolitical expansionist ambitions of Iran in Yemen - a sentiment also echoed by the Kingdom's Coalition partners and allies.

Iran, the world's biggest state sponsor of terrorism, has provided Houthis with weaponry, financial support and training as part of an effort to swing Yemen in favor of Iran's regional ambitions. Iran has publicly admitted that they will continue to meddle in Yemen's domestic politics, telling Reuters "Yemen is where the real proxy war is going on and winning the battle in Yemen will help define the balance of power in the Middle East."

Iran has backed the Houthi militia, an effort that dates back over a decade. The Houthis have been a proxy for Iran, which is seeking to extend its influence in the region, and Iran has provided the Houthis with weaponry, financial support and training.

It will be necessary to break Iranian influence in order to bring stability to Yemen and restore peace in the region. The burden of keeping Iran in check will have to be shared by a strong Arab coalition backed by the United States, all while continuing to press the attack on terrorist organizations. The United States has committed to standing by Saudi Arabia to accomplish this.

Additionally, the international community has strategic interest in preventing Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), long a highly active terrorist group operating in Yemen, from taking advantage of civil strife and political conflict in Yemen to extend its presence there. AQAP is considered by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security to be the Al Qaeda affiliate “most likely to attempt transnational attacks against the United States.” To date, that terrorist group has unsuccessfully attempted to target the U.S. at least three times – using concealed explosive devices designed to destroy commercial aircraft or detonate inside parcel packages. The intelligence services of Saudi Arabia helped disrupt two of these plots.

The status of Yemen as a safe haven for transnational terrorist organizations has challenged four consecutive U.S. Presidents. Since the bombing of the USS Cole on Oct 12, 2000, terrorist groups have continued to threaten U.S. interests in Yemen. For example, a September 2008 attack on the U.S. embassy in Sana’a resulted in 18 killed and 16 wounded. In November 2014, AQAP claimed it had attempted to kill U.S. Ambassador Matthew Tueller, but the two bombs were detected minutes before their detonation.

Furthermore, terrorist plots originating in Yemen have threatened the U.S. homeland. Saudi and American intelligence have worked together to foil these terrorist plots. For example, Saudi intelligence was crucial in foiling a 2010 AQAP plot to detonate a bomb lodged in a printer on a cargo plane bound for Chicago. The U.S. State Department and National Counter Terrorism Center has designated the group as the most active of terrorists openly intent on attacking the U.S. homeland. The conflict in Yemen, and all developments that stem from it, are a vital part of the United States’ Global War on Terror. Restoration of the legitimate, internationally-recognized government of Yemen would further enhance U.S. counterterrorism objectives in Yemen.

Finally, there is the Kingdom's interest in safeguarding regional security. Yemen is of considerable geopolitical importance. The country, with its 1,184-mile coastline, is strategically located next to the Bab al Mandab strait, through which commercial oil tankers carry an estimated 3.4 million barrels per day (3.5% to 4% of the global oil supply).

United States foreign policy, as articulated by President Donald Trump, places a greater emphasis on U.S. allies taking greater responsibility for their own regional security. Saudi Arabia is in full agreement with this policy. Indeed, Saudi efforts to stabilize Yemen are an effort to assert the Kingdom’s role as a guarantor of regional stability. These areas of agreement were further outlined by Foreign Minister Adel bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir in remarks to the Munich Security Conference on February 19, 2017: “[President Trump] believes in destroying Daesh; so do we. He believes in containing Iran; so do we. He believes in working with traditional allies; so do we. And when we look at the composition of the Cabinet and the personalities that he appointed: Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State, Secretary of Homeland Security, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Treasury. These are very experienced, highly skilled, highly capable individuals who share that worldview.”

Iran actively supported members of the Houthi tribe in northern Yemen, including activities intended to build military capabilities, which could pose a greater threat to security and stability in Yemen and the surrounding region. In July 2012, the Yemeni Interior Ministry arrested members of an alleged Iranian spy ring, headed by a former member of the IRGC.
The Houthis and Iran

Iran’s Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) have provided the Houthis with money, training, and sophisticated weaponry for more than a decade, according to the U.S. State Department. The Revolutionary Guard is believed to have transferred rocket and missile capability as well.

"Iran continues to provide arms to the Houthi forces, despite a U.N. Security Council resolution prohibiting such actions," said Senator Bob Corker to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on March 9, 2017. "Houthis have used these weapons to attack U.S. ships off of the Yemeni coast, and they are launching missiles across the border into Saudi Arabia."

Thomas Joscelyn of the Foundation of the Defense of Democracies at the same hearing added, "There is no question that Iran and the Houthis are allies." He continued: "It is in Iran's interest to work with the Houthis against Saudi-backed forces in Yemen, while also encouraging Houthi incursions into the Saudi kingdom. These statements sum up the general U.S. government view of the Iranian relationship with the Houthi forces as well as that of the Gulf and other Saudi-led coalition forces in Yemen.

The U.S. Government has long recognized Iran as one of the Houthis' two key backers, the other being former President Saleh and his network. In its Country Reports on Terrorism 2012, the State Department noted. 5

The U.S. and its allies have intercepted multiple shipments from Iran to the Houthis that have included coastal defense systems, according to senior U.S. officials. Tehran has stepped up its assistance since May 2016, sending anti-ship missiles, explosives, and personnel.

Interdiction of vessels smuggling arms to Iranian-backed Houthi militias in Yemen have been ongoing for years.

On February 21, 2012, Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi was elected president in a momentous vote that marked a new chapter of optimism for legitimate governance in Yemen.
A Recent History of Yemen

Yemen has always been a fragile state, one that hostile foreign actors have used as a proxy for their own regional ambitions. Throughout Yemen’s history, the United States and Saudi Arabia have partnered with the legitimate government of Yemen to fight transnational terrorist groups and promote regional stability. Hostile actors such as Iran, however, have preyed upon internal political divisions in the country to destabilize Yemen and use it as a base to threaten Saudi territory, as well as disrupt vital commercial shipping lanes.

Meanwhile, transnational terrorist groups such as Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula and Daesh have taken advantage of internal divisions in Yemen to carve out a safe haven for terrorist activities. The Al-Qaeda bombing of the USS Cole in October 2000 in Aden harbor was the first of many attacks on Western targets in Yemen in recent years. In September 2004, a Yemeni court sentenced two men to death and four others to prison terms for orchestrating the suicide bombing of the USS Cole.

Continuous Counterinsurgency: 2004-2011

In June 2004, Houthi rebels began a revolt in the northern province of Sa'ada. On August 5, 2004, Yemeni officials announced a major offensive to quash this rebellion in these northern mountains. In the six-week conflict that ensued, 500 people were killed—the first large-scale death toll in the conflict.

By 2007, the Yemeni government seized bases belonging to the Houthis in northern Yemen, following fighting that claimed 4,000 lives and drove approximately 2,500 civilians from their homes. On June 16, 2007, representatives of both sides announced a ceasefire in that three-year fight. The ceasefire was broken on January 10, 2008 when Houthis attacked military bases near Jabal Marran. On September 17, 2008, the U.S. Embassy was attacked with automatic weapons and rocket-propelled grenades.

In 2009, the conflict began to escalate on the border, with Houthi fighters infiltrating Saudi Arabia. In response, Saudi Arabia launched a large-scale military incursion into northern Yemen in November to address the infiltration of Houthi militias and stop attacks targeting Saudi border areas. By January 2010, this cross-border fighting had claimed the lives of 133 Saudi soldiers.

Peaceful Political Transition: 2011-2014

On February 2, 2011, facing a Tunisia-style “Arab Spring” national uprising, President Saleh announced that he would not seek re-election in 2013, but would serve out the remainder of his term. This decision came after the start of demonstrations that drew people from all interest groups, including Houthis, to protest the poor governance and corruption that had marred Yemeni political institutions under Saleh. Over 16,000 protestors participated in the early demonstrations of January 2011, urging an end to the 33-year presidency of Saleh, who had failed to adequately improve the welfare of Yemen’s people during his rule.

The youth of Yemen played an instrumental role in the protests as leading activists and civil society representatives calling for a prosperous future for all Yemenis. For years, stagnant development and widespread poverty were significant aggravators of unrest in Yemen. After decades of political and economic frustration, opposition groups put forth a proposal to have Saleh peacefully step down from power. Saleh rejected all popular demands for political change, instead resorting to a crackdown on demonstrators that lasted for more than a year. Protests were met with relentless violence by Saleh-backed forces that targeted crowds of civilians and left countless demonstrators wounded.

Finally, the contentious political turmoil in Yemen reached its culmination with a power transfer agreement to remove Saleh from office. By November 2011, the Government of Yemen, alongside allied neighboring states in the Gulf Cooperation Council, introduced the GCC Initiative to prevent the country’s descent into civil war. Despite attempts by Saleh to impede the GCC Initiative and the transitional phase that followed, a national unity government emerged with the unprecedented guarantee of transparent and free elections. On February 21, 2012, Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi was elected president in a momentous vote that marked a new chapter of optimism for legitimate governance in Yemen.

As part of the GCC Initiative, a National Dialogue Conference, structured by United Nations Security Council Resolution 2051, began in 2013. The details of the accord were worked out by the United Nations, led by Special Envoy Jamal L. Benomar. President Hadi had managed to bring together all the nation's political factions—including the Houthis—in an attempt to reach consensus on governance.

The NDC started its sessions on March 18, 2013, and all parties agreed on a political "road map" following the conclusion of the NDC on January 24, 2014. The NDC called for Aden and Hadramawt to be the south's two new federal regions, with the remaining four federal regions to be in the north. The capital, Sana'a, would have a special status. The next step was drafting the constitution. The Houthis, who had initially agreed to support the outcome of NDC, obstructed its implementation.

Houthi Destabilization: 2014-2015

The promise of progress and stability arising from Yemen's political transition began to erode throughout 2014 and early 2015. When the NDC concluded in January 2014, Yemen's political transition was not yet complete. The National Dialogue worked to modify the government structure and the rights of citizens. Still, a constitution was yet to be drafted, a referendum on its approval had to be held, and subsequent presidential and parliamentary elections were still on hold.

Many international observers were concerned that the momentum in Yemen would shift from the positive gains made by President Hadi to those opposed to the internationally-backed transition process—namely, former president Saleh and his Houthi allies who sought to redraw Yemen's internal boundaries in their favor.
Within weeks, the Houthi movement, at war with the government on-and-off since 2004, launched another military offensive against various local allies of President Hadi. In February 2014, days after the conclusion of the National Dialogue Conference, the Houthis launched an attack against tribal forces in Amran province. Forces aligned with former President Saleh reportedly joined the Houthis. In May, a brigade of the Yemeni Army with ties to former General Ali Mohsen (who had fought the Houthis in previous rounds of conflict) engaged Houthi fighters in Amran. By July, Houthis had seized the province and city of Amran, killing the leader of the brigade that had been dispatched to stop the Houthis.

Beginning in August, Houthi protestors surrounded the capital, demanding that the government resign and fuel subsidies be reinstated. (Yemen has the highest level of energy subsidies in the region). Government security forces clashed with Houthis encamped around the capital, killing several people. By September, Houthis had taken control of Sana’a, gaining control of principal government buildings and forcing the resignation of the Yemeni prime minister, Mohammed Basindawa.

On September 21, 2014, the United Nations brokered a ceasefire agreement known as the Peace and National Partnership Agreement. Under the terms of the deal, the Houthis and a separatist movement in the southern part of the country were to be granted greater representation in a new government. The deal also called for the reinstatement of fuel subsidies. An annex to the deal, which the Houthis did not sign, called on that group to abide by the ceasefire, disarm their militia, and leave the capital.

On November 7, Yemeni officials announced the formation of a new government consistent with the terms of the Peace and Partnership Agreement. However, the Houthis and the General People’s Congress refused to participate in the new government. On the same day, the United Nations Security Council imposed sanctions under UN Security Council Resolution 2140 (asset freeze and travel ban) on former president Saleh and Houthi leaders Abd al Khaliq al Huthi and Abdullah Yahya al Hakim.

The United States, which had sought the sanctions, announced that "As of fall 2012 Ali Abdullah Saleh had reportedly become one of the primary supporters of the Houthi rebellion. Saleh was behind the attempts to cause chaos throughout Yemen." A day after the formation of the new government and the imposition of sanctions, the former ruling party headed by ex-president Saleh ousted President Hadi from his role as the party's Secretary General. In addition, AQAP claimed that it tried to assassinate U.S. Ambassador to Yemen Matthew Tueller, but its bombs were detected "minutes before their detonation."6

Throughout the winter of 2014, the Houthis continued to circumvent the authority of President Hadi. The group unilaterally appointed regional governors and rejected the appointment of a new army chief of staff. Despite political efforts, the Houthis continued to retain armed militiamen in the capital. Houthi militiamen detained President Hadi's chief of staff, Ahmed Awad bin Mubarak, one of the primary figures involved in the drafting process of the new constitution.

Houthi aggression continued in early 2015, led by troops loyal to Abdul Malik al Houthi. The Presidential Palace was seized on January 20, 2015 and Houthi militias attacked the private residence of President Hadi in Sana'a. This Houthi leader was praised by Mohsen Rezaei, former senior Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps (IRGC) commander, claiming "Congratulations to you, the heroic resistance of the people and the glorious victory of you the children of Islam."7

The Houthis placed President Hadi under house arrest, and Prime Minister Khaled Bahah and his cabinet resigned.

On February 6, the Houthi movement illegally disbanded Parliament and attempted to establish the appointive Supreme Revolutionary Committee as the highest governing authority. By this time, the Houthi-Saleh coup controlled elements of the Yemeni Army, including its air forces and ballistic missile capabilities. President Hadi fled Sana’a and moved to Aden.

Regional Intervention: 2015-Present

Following the failure among political factions to produce a consensus government in the wake of the coup against Hadi, the Houthis unilaterally announced an extra-constitutional governance plan, while the United States, United Nations, and Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) called for President Hadi’s return to office. On February 10, the U.S. State Department announced that it would suspend embassy operations in Sana’a and was relocating U.S. personnel elsewhere.

In March 2015, the Houthi militias, in an alliance with former president Saleh, continued their offensive and seized Taiz, Yemen’s third-largest city, including the international airport. They advanced to Aden, where they surrounded the Presidential Palace and threatened to kill or capture President Hadi. On March 8, 2015, Saudi Arabia, in response to a request by President Hadi, invited Yemeni factions to hold a conference under the umbrella of the GCC in Riyadh. The Houthis and their allies declined. Houthi militias bombed the Presidential Palace using seized aircraft from the Yemeni air forces on March 19, 2015.

On March 25, 2015, the Houthis expanded their control over most cities in Yemen, seizing the southern capital, Aden. The Kingdom had by then clearly communicated that any move to capture Aden would trigger military action. The Saudi government then announced that it would intervene in Yemen with a coalition consisting of nine other nations: United Arab Emirates, Egypt, Morocco, Bahrain, Jordan, Qatar, Sudan, Senegal and Kuwait. On March 26, Saudi Arabia, leading the Coalition, launched Operation Decisive Storm.

The Coalition’s March 2015 operations in Yemen came in response to an appeal for assistance by the legitimate president of Yemen, Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi, based upon the principle of self-defense contained in Article 51 of the UN Charter. A coup d’état by an extremist militia supported by Iran had resulted in the occupation of several cities (including Sana’a), the seizure of government posts, and the bombing of the Presidential Palace. The Houthis and forces loyal to former president Saleh occupied major cities in violation of international law, the GCC Initiative, and the outcomes of the National Dialogue, to which the Houthis had given their consent.

Operation Decisive Storm: March 2015

On March 26, 2015, Saudi Arabia deployed its armed forces at the request of President Hadi to help resist Houthi aggression. The Houthis were advancing toward the southern city of Aden, where the Yemeni government was based, in order to remove him from power in another attempted coup.

The 10-country Coalition joined the military campaign in order to protect and defend the legitimate government of Yemen. Saudi Arabia pledged to protect the people of Yemen and its legitimate government from a takeover by the Houthis. Gulf officials also stated that the operation was intended to deter the strategic threat against Gulf states posed by the Houthi advance and Iran’s growing strategic designs in the region.

Several Gulf states joined Saudi Arabia in military operations. The United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait and Qatar all contributed air support. Non-Gulf states of Jordan, Morocco, and Sudan also showed their support for Operation Decisive Storm. These Coalition members lent their support out of a desire to preserve the legitimate government of Yemen under President Hadi.

Operation Renewal of Hope: April 2015–Present

On April 20, 2015, Saudi spokesman for the Coalition forces, Brigadier General Ahmed Asiri announced that Operation Decisive Storm had ended and would be replaced by a new campaign, Operation Renewal of Hope. The new operation was to mark the start of a more limited military campaign aimed at preventing the rebels from operating. Speaking at a news conference in Riyadh that day, Asiri said that Decisive Storm’s
The United States stepped up its efforts to prevent Iranian interference in Yemen and Tehran’s supplying of weapons to the Houthis. The U.S. Navy sent the USS Theodore Roosevelt to Yemen on April 20, 2015 to join other American ships prepared to intercept vessels carrying weapons.

heavy airstrikes would be scaled down. Asiri maintained that the goals of the coalition’s new phase, Renewal of Hope, are to prevent Houthi rebels from “targeting civilians or changing realities on the ground.”

At this time, the U.S. stepped up its efforts to prevent Iranian interference in Yemen and Tehran’s supplying of weapons to the Houthis. White House spokesperson Joshua Earnest announced at a press conference on April 20, that Iran was seeking to supply weapons to that rebel group, in violation of U.N. Security Council Resolution 2216, which authorized an arms embargo against the Houthis. The U.S. Navy sent the aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt to Yemen on April 20, 2015 to intensify security and join other American ships prepared to intercept any Iranian vessels carrying weapons to the Houthis.

In March 2016, Yemeni President Hadi declared that Yemen’s national army and popular resistance forces had liberated more than 85 percent of the Yemeni territories from Houthi militia control and from the Houthi-allied forces of the ousted former president Ali Abdullah Saleh.

President Hadi also said during those interviews that Yemen would have “fallen in four days” and would have been “an Iranian state” had it not been for the launch of Operation Decisive Storm by the Arab military coalition under the leadership of Saudi Arabia.8

Since the liberation of the port city of Mukalla in April 2016, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) does not control cities in Yemen.
AQAP and Daesh in Yemen

Both Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and Daesh have been able to exploit the political and security vacuum left by the civil war in Yemen to expand their presence and influence in the country. Saudi Arabia and its military allies have undertaken a campaign to combat and dismantle the dangerous terrorist organizations throughout Yemen. While the rise of terrorism in parts of Yemen has been rapid, Saudi Arabia and the legitimate Yemeni government have forced dangerous terrorist cells to retreat from key coastal cities of Mukalla, Aden and others.

Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula

Al-Qaeda has deep roots inside Yemen. Osama bin Laden and Ayman al Zawahiri’s men first began to lay the groundwork for Al-Qaeda’s organization inside Yemen in the early 1990s. Several different terrorist organizations, including the Army of Aden Abyan and Al-Qaeda in Yemen (AQY), both considered predecessors of AQAP, have been able to take advantage of decades of political instability in the country to become serious terrorist threats to both Saudi Arabia and Western countries.

AQY and its affiliates made terrorism against Western countries a top priority and successfully carried out several attacks against Western targets, including the bombing of the USS Cole in October 2000 that killed 17 U.S. service members. After the Al-Qaeda-orchestrated attacks on September 11, 2001, the U.S. became more involved in countering the terrorism in Yemen by deploying special forces on the ground and executing drone strikes targeted at Al-Qaeda leadership. These counterterrorism campaigns were successful in weakening the organizations and diminishing the groups’ members, however, several groups were able to exploit the lack of consistent pressure to form AQAP in the late 2000s.

After forming AQAP, the group quickly became one of the world’s most-dangerous terrorist organizations. The group was formally designated a terrorist organization by the U.S. State Department in January 2010. Over the past decade, the group has been responsible for some of the most-notable terrorist attacks in the region and throughout the world. AQAP inspired or orchestrated the January 2015 Paris terrorist attacks, the failed bombing on a Detroit-bound plane in December 2009, and attacks on the U.S., Italian and British embassies in Yemen. In 2009, an AQAP suicide bomber attempted to assassinate Saudi Crown Prince Mohammad bin Naif, then serving as deputy interior minister, in Jeddah.

Saudi Arabia has been an international force in combatting the rise of terrorism in the Middle East, including AQAP in Yemen. For example, Saudi intelligence was crucial in foiling a 2010 AQAP plot to detonate a bomb lodged in a printer on a Chicago-bound cargo plane. Today, Saudi Arabia, along with the military coalition in Yemen and Western allies, are focused on defeating AQAP and determined to prevent Yemen from being a safe haven for terrorists.

The expansionist goals and tactics of the Houthi militias in Yemen have been a boon for AQAP recruitment efforts. Since the Houthis overthrew President Hadi, AQAP terrorists have expanded their presence in the country, specifically the southern and eastern regions. AQAP was able to take advantage of the security vacuum in the country and establish based across a large stretch of Yemen’s southern coast.

In April 2015, AQAP fighters attacked the port city of Mukalla and were able to seize control of the city’s key buildings and infrastructure. AQAP fighters in Mukalla stormed a prison during the attack, reportedly freeing approximately 300 imprisoned terrorists. The practice of freeing inmates has become a regular tactic for AQAP since the Houthis consolidated power.

A few weeks after AQAP gained control of Mukalla, the Yemeni armed forces, in collaboration with Saudi and Emirati special forces, conducted a multi-faceted attack on AQAP in Mukalla in order to retake the city. The campaign, which included airstrikes and ground forces, was successful in driving AQAP from the city and is estimated to have killed up to 800 terrorist fighters. Since the liberation of Mukalla in April 2016, Al Qaeda in the Arabia Peninsula does not control cities in Yemen.

Daesh

In November 2014, after AQAP was weakened by the counterterrorism campaign led by Saudi Arabia and its allies, Daesh established a foothold in Yemen and formally announced a branch in the country. As of 2015, at least eight sub-groups have operated under the banner of Daesh in Yemen, though the activity of each geographic cell is inconsistent across the country. Daesh in Yemen has made opposition to both Saudi Arabia and Houthi militias a large part of its ideology. In response to the progressive loss of AQAP forces in U.S. airstrikes, Daesh fighters presented itself as an alternative to attract a new cadre of followers, some of whom defected from AQAP. Through 2016, analysts estimated that Daesh in Yemen had hundreds of followers.

The group gained international attention in March 2015 with the execution of its first attack in Yemen. Daesh claimed responsibility for two suicide bombings on mosques in Sana’a. The attacks, which killed 137 and wounded 357, marked the beginning of an ongoing series of executions and bombings targeting mosques, Houthi headquarters, and Yemeni army bases.

Daesh has played an increasingly antagonistic role in Yemen’s civil war. The group has exploited instability and the country’s power vacuum to wage war against the legitimate Yemeni government. In October 2015, Daesh launched its first attack against Yemeni government installations through coordinated suicide bombings in Aden, targeting Yemeni forces under President Hadi and the Saudi-led military coalition. In December 2015, Daesh called for attacks against Saudi Arabia in retaliation for the Kingdom’s participation in the 68-member Global Coalition Against Daesh and conducting airstrikes against Daesh targets in Syria. Daesh has directly targeted coalition forces in revenge for their coordinated efforts to degrade the terror group’s operational bases in Syria. In particular, Daesh fighters have placed Saudi forces in their crosshairs as the coalition has successfully liberated areas of Yemen from Houthi and AQAP control.

The expansion of military coordination between the Saudi-led coalition and Yemeni government forces has prompted an uptick in violent terror from Daesh-affiliate militants. As Saudi Arabia has increased its support to the Yemen air campaign, forces allied with the legitimate government have faced targeted attacks on their security installations. In August 2016, Daesh forces carried out a suicide car bomb attack in northern Aden, killing over 70 Yemeni army recruits. In December 2016, Daesh claimed responsibility for the death of 35 Yemeni soldiers at a military camp in Aden. As the Coalition forces continue to regain control over Yemeni territory, the long-term viability of Daesh is under significant threat.

9 Statement by General Asiri, Coalition to Restore Legitimacy in Yemen, April 25, 2016
We have received numerous reports of the recruitment of children in Yemen for use in the armed conflict, mostly by the Popular Committees affiliated with the Houthis. In all, between 26 March 2015 and 31 January 2017, the UN has managed to verify the recruitment of 1,476 children, all boys.

RAVINA SHAMDASANI, SPOKESPERSON FOR THE UN HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS
Houthi Violations

In addition to violating UN resolutions, the Houthis have committed many other serious acts, including:

On October 1, missiles from Yemen struck HSV Swift, a UAE civilian logistics ship carrying humanitarian aid while it transited the Bab al Mandab strait. The ship was transiting the Red Sea near the port of Mokha. Houthi-Saleh forces are believed to have used Chinese-built C-802s in the attack. The UN Security Council condemned the attack, saying that “Members take threats to shipping around Bab al Mandab, a strategically important shipping passage, extremely seriously.”

On October 7, a Houthi ballistic missile was fired at the Saudi city of Khamis Mushait;

On October 9, a ballistic missile landed near the Saudi summer capital of Taif, near Makkah;

Another missile was launched at the ancient Yemeni city of Marib on October 9, on the same day two missiles were fired at U.S. Navy ships in the Bab al-Mandab and deflected by defensive systems.

On October 27, the coalition intercepted and destroyed missiles that were targeting Makkah, one of Islam’s most sacred sites.

A 105-page, declassified report to the United Nations Security Council published in August 2016, documented violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights committed by the Houthi-Saleh forces. The report on the implementation of an arms embargo and targeted sanctions on Saleh and four Houthi leaders was submitted to the 15-member Security Council Sanctions Committee, which had imposed an arms embargo on those rebels and soldiers loyal to Saleh. Resolution 2216 of April 14, 2015 demanded that the Houthis withdraw from all seized areas and that they relinquish all seized arms. It also established an arms embargo on the Houthis and on forces loyal to former president Saleh.

The UN report, in addition to other reports of late 2016, details the following such violations by the Houthi rebels:

The concealment of fighters and equipment in or close to civilians in Mokha in the Taiz governorate “with the deliberate aim of avoiding attack” and in violation of international humanitarian law;

The diversion of approximately $100 million a month from Yemen’s central bank to support the group’s war effort and that the foreign reserves of the central bank had dropped to $1.3 billion in June 2016 from $4.6 billion in November 2014;¹⁰

The recruitment of children, and for the killing and maiming of children and attacks on schools and hospitals;¹¹

The usage of fishing vessels for alleged weapons’ transfers, as described by the 2410 Committee of the UN Verification and Inspection Mechanism (UNVIM). This latter body was established in May 2016 to facilitate the flow of commercial goods into Yemen, while ensuring compliance with the targeted arms embargo set up in Resolution 2216. This Committee received accounts from member states of such fishing vessels that were intercepted while transferring arms, believed to be for the Houthis.

Saudi humanitarian assistance funded 124 projects totaling $847 million — offering food, shelter, health and education to the people of Yemen.
Humanitarian Aid to the People of Yemen

The Coalition and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia continue to make the protection of civilians the priority in its efforts to restore safety and stability to Yemen.

Saudi Arabia has been the single largest donor of humanitarian aid to Yemen, providing more than $847 million in humanitarian assistance. In April 2015, in response to an appeal by the United Nations Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Salman bin Abdulaziz ordered the donation of $274 million to the UN to support its humanitarian efforts in Yemen. In May 2015, the Kingdom established the King Salman Humanitarian Aid and Relief Center (KSRelief) to more effectively deliver aid to the people of Yemen. The Kingdom then donated an additional $267 million.

KSRelief is providing aid to all areas of Yemen, including areas controlled by Houthi militias. In fact, 70 percent of all humanitarian aid to Yemen arrives through the Port of Hodeidah. The city of Hodeidah is one of the major population concentrations under Houthi control and at very high risk of famine.

KSRelief, cooperates with a number of international humanitarian organizations, such as the Red Cross, the UN, and Doctors Without Borders, to facilitate their efforts in Yemen.

KSRelief is also working closely with the UN International Children’s Emergency Fund (UNICEF) in training 3,153 health workers on the social management of acute malnutrition and opened 854 centers for therapeutic nutrition program. The program also provided medical treatment and follow up cases of acute malnutrition. KSRelief mobile health teams have treated over a quarter of a million children suffering from acute malnutrition and provided immunization and postnatal care to over 1.2 million children throughout Yemen. The teams also provided services for pregnant women and post-delivery care for over 220,000 women.

KSRelief has also provided funding to the World Health Organization to assist with the organization’s life-saving health care services in Yemen. As of May 2016, funding from KSRelief has allowed WHO to deploy 14 mobile teams to five governorates in Yemen. Additionally, WHO has sent several health facility teams to Yemen, including seven surgical teams, to provide trauma care in the governorates of Aden, Abyan, Hajjah, Sada’a and Amran. Funding from KSRelief have allowed the WHO to provide life-saving medicines and supplies to hospitals serving more than 2 million patients.

Since its establishment, KSRelief has been an active force for providing aid to the people of Yemen.

In March 2017, KSRelief sent 58 trucks carrying medical supplies and equipment to a number of provinces in Yemen. Of these, 11 trucks delivered supplies to Republic Hospital in Aden and six trucks to Mareb Hospital. KSRelief has entered into a number of agreements with private hospitals in Aden and Taiz aimed at providing full medical care for more than 750 wounded in these provinces. KSRelief seeks to activate the role of government hospitals to treat the injured inside Yemeni territories by providing medical services and treatment devices.

KSRelief has launched 51 projects in health, nutrition, water and environmental sanitation in Yemen totaling more than $208 million and benefiting 24.5 million Yemeni citizens, in addition to programs providing medical care and treatment for people inside Yemeni territory.

In collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), KSRelief provided basic services such as diabetes and cancer medicines, and support the operation of emergency rooms by providing 350,000 gallons of fuel to 88 hospitals and 19 health facilities in Yemen. KSRelief has provided more than 12 million vaccines, to date, for Yemeni children against measles, rubella, tetanus and whooping cough.

In January 2017, KSRelief distributed 300,000 food baskets in the Hodeidah Province of Yemen. The baskets are expected to benefit more than 460,000 Yemenis in need.
Humanitarian Assistance in Yemen

- Saudi Arabian remains by far the largest donor of aid to Yemen.

- $847 million in humanitarian assistance through King Salman Humanitarian Aid and Relief Center.

- Legal residency inside the Kingdom to 600,000 Yemeni refugees fleeing the civil war.

- 12 million vaccines for Yemeni children.

In July 2016, KSRelief distributed more than 900 tons of medicine and medical supplies as part of its continuing support of health care services in Yemen.

In another major humanitarian effort, Saudi Arabia has allowed Yemenis who fled the civil war and entered the Kingdom illegally to adjust their status and become legal residents. This initiative has enabled more than 600,000 Yemenis to obtain medical care, education, and jobs.

The U.S. and the U.K. also helped form the Friends of Yemen Group, a multilateral forum of 31 concerned countries that was launched at a January 2010 conference in London in order to raise funds for Yemen’s development and increase donor coordination.
The Coalition has not imposed a blockade or an economic boycott on Yemen, and it continues to grant permits in record time for all relief and humanitarian ships.
Blockade Accusations

The obstruction of the flow of commercial and humanitarian shipments in Yemen is confined to ports in areas controlled by Houthi militias and forces loyal to former President Saleh. These parties have deliberately obstructed the entry of shipments in order to deepen the humanitarian crisis and arouse international public opinion against the Coalition.

In order to ensure that maritime commerce to Yemen complies with the UN Security Council arms embargo, the Government of Yemen authorized the creation of the United Nations Verification and Inspection Mechanism (UNVIM) on May 2, 2016. Based in Djibouti, UNVIM provides fast and impartial clearance services for shipping companies transporting commercial imports and bilateral assistance to Yemeni ports outside of the authority of the Government of Yemen. Ships bound for Yemen are cleared expeditiously. For example, in March 2017, the most recent month for which data is available, 34 certificates of clearance were issued expeditiously. These ships transported 636,810 metric tons of cargo to Yemeni ports, including 254,690 metric tons of food.12

In addition to hindering humanitarian and trade shipments, Houthi militias and forces loyal to former President Saleh have exploited their control over Yemeni ports, including the Port of Hodeidah, by engaging in smuggling activities. This has created a black market for petroleum, goods, and humanitarian supplies. Houthi militias have used the proceeds to finance their operations and raise the profile of their leaders. They have similarly used their control of ports as a political bargaining chip by imposing sieges and starvation on provinces and cities.

The Coalition has not imposed a blockade or an economic boycott on Yemen, and it continues to grant immediate and periodic permits in a record time for all relief and humanitarian ships. In the case of commercial ships, the UNVIM, in cooperation with the Coalition and the legitimate government of Yemen, issues permits on a neutral basis to ships entering all Yemeni ports.

The Joint Incidents Assessment Team (JIAT), tasked with assessing claims of violations and accidents as a result of the Coalition’s military operations in Yemen, continues to display a strong commitment to independent investigations by releasing its findings to the public.
Steps to Reduce Civilian Casualties

Safeguard Civilians

The Saudi-led Coalition in Yemen is committed to protecting civilians in Yemen and has taken steps to avoid causalities in an ongoing war zone. Among these steps, the Coalition launched an independent assessment team, fostered active partnerships with relief organizations and focused on safeguarding Yemen's urban centers as part of a concerted effort to protect civilians and uphold international humanitarian law.

Saudi Arabia established an independent Joint Incidents Assessment Team (JIAT) and tasked it with assessing claims of violence against civilians by Coalition forces, including violations and accidental fire incidents. The Coalition's JIAT is composed of military members, weapons experts and legal specialists in the laws of war. The independent group reviews reports of Coalition activities that are known to have led to civilian casualties, and offers recommendations for ways to avoid future incidents.

One of the JIAT recommendations adopted by the Coalition is the policy to issue repeated warnings to Houthi militias and Saleh forces so that they can evacuate cities prior to a Coalition air strike. The Coalition also has heightened its emphasis on safeguarding critical infrastructure and, as a result, civilian lives in Yemen's urban centers.

The Coalition is working alongside UN agencies and the International Committee of the Red Cross as part of a collaborative approach to minimize the possibility of harm to civilians, medical personnel, journalists and relief organizations.
JIAT Findings

GREAT HALL INCIDENT

With respect to the unfortunate Great Hall incident in Sana’a on October 8, 2016, the Coalition expressed its deepest condolences and support to the victims’ families, and for all those affected by violence in Yemen. After conducting immediate investigations, the JIAT concluded that a party affiliated to the Yemeni Presidency of the General Chief of Staff passed inaccurate information that there was a gathering of armed Houthi leaders in a known location in Sana’a, and insisted that the location be targeted immediately as a legitimate military target.

The JIAT found that because of non-compliance with Coalition Rules of Engagement and Procedures (ROEs), and the release of inaccurate information, a Coalition aircraft wrongly targeted the location, resulting in civilian deaths and injuries.

The Coalition, tasked with supporting the legitimate government of Yemen, has publicly affirmed that it accepts the results of the investigations conducted by the JIAT and is committed to implementing its recommendations.

ABS HOSPITAL

In response to the alleged bombing carried out by the coalition forces on Abs Hospital in the Yemeni city of Abs in the province of Hijjah on August 8, 2016, which resulted in killing seven people and injuring 13 others, the official spokesperson for the JIAT confirmed that the Coalition was unaware of the presence of the hospital that was inadvertently struck.

Intelligence reports confirmed that Houthi militia leaders were gathered in the northern part of the city of Abs. The Coalition forces then targeted the location of that gathering. As a result, air forces monitored a moving vehicle from the targeted site heading southwards, pursued and shelled it immediately. The vehicle was next to the building that had no signs of a hospital before the bombing. It was later proved to be Abs Hospital.

KHALEQ MARKET

On February 28, 2016, the UN Secretary General strongly condemned the airstrike in Nahem District in Sana’a on February 27 that killed at least 32 civilians and injured at least 41. The Joint Incidents Assessment Team found after reviewing the facts that one of the Coalition’s warplanes was on a humanitarian mission close to the Popular Resistance and the army loyal to the legitimate government. It observed two heavily armed transport vehicles and armed Houthi militia stopped near a small market beside some small buildings and canvas tents on a road linking the Directorate of Naham with Sana’a. These transport vehicles and Houthi militia were considered to be high-value military targets and a laser-guided missile was deployed.

ASMAA SCHOOL, HODEIDAH

Refuting allegations by the Amnesty International that Asmaa school, located in the city of Al-Mansouriya in the Yemeni province of Hodeidah was subject to air shelling on August 24, 2015, JIAT spokesperson Al-Mansour said that the site was targeted based on surveillance information showing armed Houthi militias were using it as a headquarters, storage facility and distribution post for weapons smuggled through the Hodeidah port. The site was classified as a military target of high value.

Based on the laws of war, the legal protections of civilian sites are dropped when that site is being used for a military purpose. Considering this fact, as well as the fact that students had vacated the school for some time, the Coalition forces targeted the site. The investigation showed that no human life was lost and the building only sustained partial damage (less than 25 percent.) The Joint Incidents Assessment Team reached the conclusion that the procedures followed by the Coalition forces targeting the site were correct.

MOKHA COMPLEX

Human Rights Watch alleged on July 27, 2015 that the Coalition forces bombed a compound in the Directorate of Mokha, Taiz governorate three days earlier, resulting in the deaths of 65 civilians. The Joint Incidents Assessment Team found, after reviewing the intelligence information, that there were four targets in the areas controlled by the Houthi militia and forces of the former President Saleh. These included coastal defense missile batteries, which pose an immediate danger to ships and the Coalition’s naval forces in the Red Sea.

It was later found that a residential compound was erroneously targeted due to inaccurate information from the intelligence source. The Joint Incidents Assessment Team informed the Coalition forces about these findings, and the coalition has expressed its deep regret at this unintentional error. Coalition forces
Foreign Minister
Adel Bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir

CHATHAM HOUSE | SEPTEMBER 7, 2016

“There is a fault with how information is gathered in Yemen, which is not accurate. People say this is a school. Well, it may have been a school a year ago, but was not a school when it was bombed, and then they say the Coalition hit a school, not true.

People accuse us — the Coalition — of bombing a wedding party in which 120 people died. We had no planes the day of the wedding, or the day after the wedding. But I do not see anyone retracting the charges.

We were accused of bombing the old city of Sana’a, common heritage of mankind, when we had no fliers anywhere near the old city.”

are committed to observing the rules laid down in international conventions of humanitarian law. In particular, the Coalition maintains its commitment not to target civilians during military operations and to take all measures to preserve their safety. The Coalition confirmed its readiness to make financial reparation to the victims’ families in accordance with international law once the supporting documentation has been submitted to the Reparation Commission.

HAYDAN HOSPITAL

According to the claims of Doctors Without Borders, the Haydan Hospital in Saa’da Province was bombed by the Coalition forces. The Joint Team found after reviewing the facts that the Coalition forces had accurate intelligence information that there was a military gathering of Houthi militia in the Directorate of Haydan. A warplane was ordered to strike the military gathering. After verification of the incident from the Joint Incidents Assessment Team, it became clear that the building was a medical facility that the armed Houthi militia was using as a military shelter in contravention of international law [under Article 52, Paragraph 2, Annex Protocol I]. This fact made it a legitimate target after coalition forces warned the persons in charge under Article 19 of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

The team has confirmed that Coalition forces were unable to warn Doctors Without Borders because of the immediate threat posed by the armed Houthi militia using the medical facility located on the borders of the Kingdom. Although the Coalition bombed the installations as a military target, it acknowledges that it should have warned Doctors Without Borders that they would lose international protection before carrying out the air strike. However, the Houthi militia had already fled the building, which was empty—there were no medical staff and no patients at the facility. There were no casualties.

MOBILE CLINIC OF DOCTORS WITHOUT BORDERS, TAIZ

The Joint Incidents Assessment Team found that Coalition forces targeted hostile militant gatherings at the request of Yemeni forces loyal to the legitimate government and local popular resistance forces in Directorate of Hoban, Taiz Province. This was considered a high-priority target whose destruction would deliver military advantage.

The tent of the Doctors Without Borders organization was not bombed, but was affected by these bombings due to its proximity to the target. There were no civilian casualties. Coalition forces expressed its regrets about this unintentional error.

The Joint Incidents Assessment Team established that the clinic was not a direct target and concluded that Doctors Without Borders should have set up its facility away from military targets in order to avoid the risk of casualties. JIAT also established that the Coalition coordinates with the humanitarian organizations and works with them to assist with their humanitarian missions. JIAT is satisfied that all safety procedures implemented by Coalition forces were observed and that they adhered to international law.

Main Actors in the Yemen Crisis

2011 - Present

President Abd-Rabbuh Mansour al Hadi

President Abd-Rabbuh Mansour al Hadi is a former military officer, having served in the Yemen armed forces as a field marshal.

Hadi’s rise as President of Yemen begin with his role as Acting President between June 4 and September 23, 2011 following the attacks on the Presidential Palace in Sana’a in the wake of the ‘Arab Spring’ protests—a period referred to as the "2011 Yemeni Uprising"—in which then-President Saleh went to Saudi Arabia for medical treatment. Hadi became Acting President again on November 23, 2011 after Saleh moved into a non-active role pending the results of the next presidential elections. Hadi was chosen as a president for a two-year transitional period on February 21, 2012.

In a September 2012 interview, Hadi warned that his country, still reeling from the popular uprising that ousted Saleh, risked a descent into a civil war “worse than Afghanistan” should an upcoming months-long national dialogue fail to resolve the state’s deep political and societal rifts. Hadi warned that Yemen was facing three separate enemies, which he believed were extremist terrorists Al Qaeda, pirates in the Gulf of Aden and Houthi rebel militias. He stated his strong belief that Iran was supporting these adversaries.

Ali Abdullah Saleh al Sanhani al Humairi

As of the early 2000s, the Houthis fought against the national government of former Yemeni President Saleh. This radically changed in May 2015, when Saleh confirmed his alliance with that group. Saleh is not Houthi, but is Zaydi and a part of the Sahan tribe of northern Yemen. Traditionally, the Houthis and/or ‘Ansar Allah,’ the political organization of the Houthis, distrusted Saleh and saw him as corrupt. These views... were not unfounded: In February 2015 a panel of UN experts released a report, alleging that, during his time in power, Saleh amassed a fortune worth between $30 billion to $62 billion.14

The background to his political career and that arc of development vis-à-vis the Houthis is as follows:

From 1978 to 1990 Saleh served as President of North Yemen until its unification with South Yemen in 1990. The South accepted Saleh as president of the newly unified country. A former soldier, he had participated in the 1962 coup against Yemeni King Mohammad al Badr which saw the establishment of the Republic of Yemen that year.

From 2004, a sporadic civil war in the country has been underway with the security forces of the Yemen government battling “the Believing Youth” (Al-Shabab al Mumin), the pro-Zaydi Houthi-led movement based in the mountains west of Saa’da, the capital of Yemen’s northwestern most province.

On February 2, 2011, facing a Tunisia-style, “Arab Spring” national uprising, Saleh announced that he would not seek re-election in 2013, but would serve out the remainder of his term. In response to government violence against unarmed protesters, 12 MPs of Saleh’s party resigned on February 23. By March 5, this number had increased to 13, as well as the addition of two deputy ministers. On November 23, 2011, Saleh agreed to legally transfer the office and powers of the presidency to his deputy, Vice President Abd-Rabbuh Mansour Hadi. On February 27, 2012, Saleh formally ceded power to Hadi and stepped down as the President of Yemen.

Since that time, Saleh has been a behind-the-scenes ally of the Houthi movement in Yemen. Tribesmen and government forces loyal to Saleh have joined the Houthis in their ambitions to take over the government. On July 28, 2016, Saleh and the Houthi rebels announced a formal alliance to the fight Saudi-led military coalition, to be run by a political council of 10 members—made up of five members from Saleh’s General People’s Congress, and five from the Houthis.

The Houthis

Houthi is the name of an ancient and powerful Yemeni dynasty, in turn named after a town known as Houthi or “Huthi” that is located about halfway between Sa‘ada in the north and Yemen’s capital Sana’a to the south. The al Houthi family is a “sayyid” family—that is, descendants of the Prophet Mohammad and who played key theological and political roles in north Yemen. This family, and the political-rebel movement whose adherents collectively refer to themselves by “the Houthis,” adhere to what is known “Zaidism” or “Zaydism”—the Zaidi school of jurisprudence which emerged in the 8th century as a moderate interpretation of the Shia branch of Islam. Approximately 35 to 40 percent of Muslims in Yemen adhere to Zaidism.

Zaydis ruled parts of Yemen for almost 1,000 years until 1962 and were even supported by Saudi Arabia in the 1970s. But then the Houthis, who emerged as a Zaidi revivalist movement in the 1990s, fought a series of wars between 2004 and 2010 against the Saudi-supported central Yemeni state led by then-President Ali Abdullah Saleh.

Leadership in the movement has rested in various al Houthi family relatives. At present, Abdul Malik Badreddin al Houthi is the leader. He leads this group with his brothers Yahia Badreddin al Houthi, Abdul Karim Badreddin al Houthi, and the late Hussein Badreddin al Houthi. Abdul Malik al Houthi is the leading figure in an insurgency in the Sa‘ada province in northern Yemen, which has been continuing from 2004 to the present day.

The Saudi-led coalition's objectives in Yemen are clear: to restore the legitimate government and protect our borders from a dangerous Iranian-backed Houthi militia.

- By responding to an appeal from the legitimate president of Yemen and entering the conflict, Saudi Arabia is seeking to restore a sovereign government and standing up to Iran's aggression.
- The Kingdom has been supported in this campaign by several neighboring countries militarily and many more throughout the international community, including the United States.
- The situation in Yemen is a national security issue for Saudi Arabia, which must protect its citizens from being targeted by ballistic missile attacks against its population centers, such as the holy city of Mecca.

Saudi Arabia is working with all political factions in Yemen towards a peaceful political solution to the conflict.

- The endgame should be a political solution based on UN Security Council Resolution 2216, the GCC Initiative, and the Yemeni National Dialogue.
- The proposed Saudi framework calls for the withdrawal of forces from Sana'a and other key areas and the transfer of all heavy weapons, including ballistic missiles, from the Houthis to a neutral third party.
- The Houthis have the right to be part of the political process in Yemen, but they cannot use aggression and military weapons to disrupt national order and regional security.
- The Houthis continue to negotiate in bad faith. Saudi Arabia and the international community have made more than 70 agreements with the Houthis and ex-president Saleh, but the Houthis have reneged on every agreement.
The Saudi-led coalition in Yemen is achieving its goals.

- Military intervention was undertaken only after repeated diplomatic efforts had failed.
- The legitimate government of Yemen now controls over 85 percent of the country. Iranian intervention has been contained and deterred.
- The coalition and the Yemeni forces retook the city of Aden from the Houthis and liberated the city of Al-Mukalla from Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula.

Iran makes no secret of its nefarious intentions in Yemen. Their intervention in Yemen is just another example of Iran acting with international mischief and aggression.

- Yemen is another example – along with Iraq, Syria, Bahrain and Lebanon – that showcases Iran’s engagement in aggression outside its borders.
- The Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) have provided the Houthis with money, training, and weaponry for more than a decade, according to the U.S. State Department.
- According to a recent Reuters article, Major General Qassem Soleimani, commander of the Qods Force, met top IRGC officials in Tehran in February 2017 to evaluate plans that would further advantage the Houthis in Yemen.
- Secretary of Defense Mattis in Riyadh recently reiterated that “Iran once again is no help” in Yemen. Secretary Mattis said the French, Australian and U.S. Navies have intercepted Iranian support and weapons in transit to Yemen.
- According to the White House, the Houthis have threatened U.S. and allied vessels transiting the Red Sea. The Houthis fired missiles at the USS Mason in October 2016.

Saudi Arabia has a right to defend itself with weapons purchased with their own funds.

- Every nation should provide for its own security. Iran is posing a threat to Saudi Arabia via its support for the Houthis in Yemen.
- In response to this threat, Saudi Arabia wants to defend itself with weapons purchased with Saudi funds.
- Support for Saudi arms sales is support for Saudi Arabia fighting its own battles in the region.

The Coalition deeply regrets unfortunate incidents of errant strikes causing civilian casualties in an ongoing war zone. It is committed to protecting civilians in Yemen and has taken steps to avoid causalities.

- The Coalition established an independent Joint Incidents Assessment Team (JIAT) and tasked it with assessing claims of violence against civilians by Coalition forces, including violations and accidental fire incidents.
• The Coalition is working alongside UN agencies and the International Committee of the Red Cross as part of a collaborative approach to minimize the possibility of harm to civilians, medical personnel, journalists and relief organizations.

The Houthis have repeatedly violated international humanitarian law by design.

• Houthi militias have shelled civilian targets, planted land mines in civilian areas and coerced child soldiers into their ranks.

• Houthis use aid as a weapon. At ports under their control, such as the Port of Hodeidah, the Houthis sell humanitarian aid on the black market to purchase arms. They use food itself as a weapon, particularly to recruit child soldiers in violation of international law.

Because of the Coalition’s counterterrorism efforts, terrorist organizations like Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and Daesh can no longer use the vacuum created by Houthi destabilization to find a safe haven in Yemen.

• In April 2016, Coalition forces liberated the city of Mukalla, depriving AQAP of a key stronghold. Today, AQAP no longer controls a single city in Yemen.

• Daesh has attacked Saudi operations in Yemen in retaliation for Saudi participation in airstrikes against Daesh in Syria.

Saudi Arabia is the single largest donor of humanitarian aid to Yemen, having contributed over three quarters of a billion dollars through the King Salman Humanitarian Aid and Relief Center.

• In April 2017, the Kingdom pledged an additional $150 million donation to support KSRelief in Yemen.

• The new donation comes as part of the $8.2 billion committed by the Kingdom within its humanitarian and developmental assistance to Yemen since April 2015.

• Hodeidah, specifically, is receiving the largest amount of humanitarian aid from external sources, yet much of the population is suffering from famine. Liberation of the Port of Hodeidah would improve the flow of humanitarian aid, not stifle it.
Saudi Arabia takes a multifaceted approach to fighting terrorism that relies on hunting down the men, cutting off the money and changing the mindset that terror organizations create and rely on. The Kingdom is committed to working in close collaboration with the U.S. and its other international partners in this fight against the scourge of terrorism.

Combatting the Men

Over the past decade, the Saudi government has fundamentally restructured its operations to address national security threats and to prevent terrorist attacks. This includes finding and eliminating terrorists within the Kingdom.

- Saudi Arabia has successfully dismantled Al-Qaeda's organizational presence in the Kingdom.
- Saudi Special Forces continue to aggressively pursue counterterrorism operations against Al-Qaeda in Yemen, where it has reorganized as Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP).
- Saudi security forces maintain rigorous security standards and are continuously training on the best practices for combating terrorist threats.
- Saudi forces recently dismantled several terrorist cells and arrested dozens of individuals connected to terrorism, effectively preventing a number of terrorist attacks.
- In early January 2017, the Ministry of Interior announced that Saudi Security Forces had arrested more than 300 foreign nationals from nine nations over the past two years for involvement with Daesh.
- In 2016, Saudi Special Forces thwarted planned and imminent terrorist attacks at the Prophet's Mosque during Pilgrimage season, the U.S. consulate during Ramadan, an international football match at the al Jawahara Stadium in Jeddah, a checkpoint in Damman, tourist areas on Tarout Island on the Arabian Gulf. They also prevented seven suicide attacks targeting mosques in the Eastern Province.
Saudi Arabia works closely with the U.S. and allies to combat terrorism around the world.

- In February 2017, CIA Director Mike Pompeo honored Crown Prince Mohammed bin Naif with the George Tenet Medal to recognize his significant contributions in the fight against terrorism, demonstrating the close cooperation between the CIA and Saudi Ministry of Interior.
- The U.S. National Security Agency collaborates with the Kingdom's Ministry of Defense, focusing on internal security and terrorist activity in the Arabian Peninsula.
- The Kingdom hosts the United States Military Training Mission as a special Security Assistance and Security Cooperation organization, strengthening collaboration between the two nations.
  - Saudi-U.S. counterterrorism cooperation has resulted in the prevention of a number of terrorist plots on U.S. soil; including critical intelligence sharing that foiled a cargo plane-bombing plot by AQAP in 2010.

Saudi Arabia regularly coordinates with international organizations in fighting terrorism.

- In 2011, Saudi Arabia signed an agreement with the United Nations to create the United Nations Centre for Counter Terrorism, donating an initial $10 million for its establishment. The Kingdom donated an additional $100 million in 2014 to enhance its capabilities.
  - UNCCT has initiated more than 30 non-military counterterrorism projects around the world at the global, regional and national levels.
- In 2016, Saudi Arabia announced plans to link internal sections of its databases to the General Secretariat of Interpol to ensure a more effective method of investigation.

Cutting off the Money

In order to combat terrorist financing, Saudi Arabia has enacted one of the strictest financial control systems in the world.

- The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA), established in 2003, requires that all financial institutions within the Kingdom's jurisdiction implement all recommendations for combatting money laundering and terrorist financing issued by the Financial Action Task Force.
- The Saudi government implemented a number of rules and regulations that prevent the exploitation of charities, including by prohibiting the transfer of charitable funds abroad.
Saudi Arabia works in close alignment with its international partners on stemming illicit funding.

- Saudi Arabia currently has Financial Action Task Force Observer status, and is on track in implementing compliance standards and mutual assessment procedures to achieve full membership in 2018.
- Saudi Arabia has ratified the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, along with a number of UN resolutions related to combating terrorist financing.
- Saudi Arabia works with its international partners to place sanctions on entities that assist in terror financing, working particularly closely with the U.S. Treasury Department and cooperating with U.S. requests for certified bank records.
- Saudi Arabia serves as co-chair of the Counter-ISIL Finance Group alongside the U.S. and Italy.

Ending the Mindset

Saudi Arabia is carrying out a multifaceted campaign that attacks extremism and its ideological roots as a critical component of its strategy to defeat terrorism.

- To combat radical ideology, Saudi government officials have adopted a series of counterterrorism education measures aimed at undermining extremist views and disrupting those that promote violent extremism.
- The Ministry of Education has revised its school textbooks to ensure that they do not include intolerant language, and regularly audits these textbooks and curricula to ensure that teachers do not espouse intolerance or extremism.
- The government is working to monitor extremist communications online and through social media channels, applying cyber-security technologies to track radicalized messaging throughout the region.

Saudi government and religious leaders have routinely condemned terrorism and extremism.

- The Kingdom’s religious establishment is fully engaged with the Saudi government in countering the mindset sustaining radical extremism. The Grand Mufti and the Council of Senior Scholars have issued a number of statements and fatwas condemning terrorism and extremism.
- Imams who preach intolerance or hate toward others are dismissed, punished or retrained.
Fighting and Defeating Daesh

As the birthplace of Islam and home to the Two Holy Mosques, Saudi Arabia is the main target of Daesh and other terror groups.

- Daesh has carried out deadly attacks in the Kingdom and Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi has declared his intention to destroy the Saudi state. Given this, all exercises and training of Saudi non-conventional forces have focused on countering non-state insurgents in recent years.
- Saudi Arabia has enthusiastically joined the U.S.-led fight against Daesh, carrying out 341 airstrikes in support of coalition strikes in Syria. Further, the Saudi government has said that the Kingdom is willing to participate with its own forces if the U.S.-led coalition is prepared to engage in ground operations.
- Saudi forces have arrested hundreds of alleged Daesh supporters.
- In December 2015, Saudi Arabia announced the establishment of the Islamic Military Alliance to Fight Terrorism, which has grown to include 41 nations.
- Saudi Arabia has enthusiastically joined the U.S.-led fight against Daesh. The Saudi government has said that the Kingdom is willing to participate with its own forces if the U.S.-led coalition is prepared to engage in ground operations.

Overview

Capturing the Men; Cutting off the Money and Changing the Mindset

As the birthplace of Islam and home to the Two Holy Mosques, Saudi Arabia is an attractive strategic target of extremists who seek to redefine Islam for their own nihilistic purposes. To combat this threat, Saudi government officials and religious scholars have condemned terrorist acts and aggressively sought to combat deviant ideologies.

Defeating terrorism requires sound policies, concerted government efforts and international cooperation. Saudi Arabia is one of the leading nations in combatting terrorism and terror financing, and has been working closely with its allies to hunt down the men, cut off the money, and change the mindset that terror organizations create and rely on.

Terrorism is an enormous challenge to the global community, and the terrorist threat that directly faces Saudi Arabia is multifaceted – from Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) on its southern border to the rise of Daesh (also known as ISIS or ISIL) to its north, in Iraq and Syria, to the clandestine activities of Al-Qaeda and Daesh in the Kingdom itself. Saudi Arabia has responded by taking firm action against terrorism and its extremist roots and embracing the roles of regional leader and committed global partner to combat terrorism. The Kingdom uses all the tools at its disposal: military action to roll back the territorial gains of terrorist organizations, aggressive action to counter terrorist financing, innovative efforts to challenge and eventually overcome the ideology, theology and messages that underlie terror organizations.
The Kingdom has enthusiastically joined the U.S.-led fight against Daesh. In February 2017, Foreign Minister Adel bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir told a German newspaper that the Kingdom was “ready to send ground troops” to fight Daesh in Syria on the side of the United States, should the U.S. lead a coalition against the terrorism in that country. Saudi Arabia greatly values its strong alliance with Washington today. Few global partnerships are combating terrorism more effectively than the joint military and finance tasks forces operated by the two countries.

"Saudi Arabia is one of our closest partners on counterterrorism. I have worked very closely, especially [with] Crown Prince Mohammad bin Naif, over the last 15 years. And they are truly a good example of how foreign intelligence services can work against these terrorist organizations. And Saudi Arabia faces a very serious threat from terrorism."

Former CIA Director John Brennan
Face the Nation
September 11, 2016

Saudi Arabia’s multifaceted approach to fighting terrorism is reflected in the Kingdom’s:

- Membership in the 68-nation strong Global Coalition to Counter ISIS; making 341 sorties in support of coalition airstrikes in Syria.
- Creating in December 2015 a multi-nation Islamic Military Alliance against Terror;
- Co-chairmanship of the Counter ISIL Finance Group, along with the United States and Italy;
- Agreement with the UN in 2011 to launch the United Nations Counterterrorism Center; Saudi Arabia has pledged $110 million to the center;
- Imposition of sanctions on entities that assist in terror financing, including joint designations with the U.S Treasury Department;
- International intelligence sharing by the Saudi Ministries of Defense and Interior;
- Strengthening of local banking laws;
- Far-ranging investigations into terror-funding networks;
• Crackdowns on local money-exchange operations;
• Military-technology transfers from the U.S. that contribute to joint counterterrorism efforts;
• Army and Special Forces training with the American and British militaries, as well as security-technology research and development between Saudi Arabia’s scientific institutes and their international equivalents.
• Implementation of aggressive public education campaigns by official clerics in the Kingdom to discredit terror groups and condemn their activities;
• Monitoring its mosques to prevent political and religious incitement.

The Kingdom’s commitment to fighting terrorism stems from its history as a target of terrorist violence, but also from its recognition that terrorism is a serious threat to order, stability and human development in the world today.

In 2016, Saudi Arabia suffered 34 attacks on its soil from a variety of extremist groups, including a trio of simultaneous attacks against U.S. targets on July 2016. In total, the country has faced more than 60 known attacks by Al-Qaeda and Daesh, some two dozen of them in the last two years. The self-proclaimed leader of Daesh called for the extermination of the Saudi royal family in three formal decrees, or “fatwas,” issued between 2014 and 2016. Confronted with such threats, Saudi security forces continue to bolster their resources and capabilities.

The international situation today demands ongoing and close cooperation between nations allied against terror. Although successful in the design and implementation of its counterterrorism programs, Saudi Arabia continues to build on its initiatives, because terrorism remains a threat to the safety and security of its citizenry and the global community. The effort must continue to be a collective one wholly dedicated to eradicating terrorist violence, extremism and radicalization in all its forms: cultural, political and religious.

"This is the highest level of terrorism Saudi Arabia has experienced since at least 2000. There were more people killed from terrorism in 2015 in Saudi Arabia than in the previous 11 years combined."

"From assisting the refugees who are being thrown out of Syria by the fighting there, supporting Jordan in taking care of those refugees; the energy supplies and other support they are giving to Egypt as they work through some really tough financial times ... It's very clear that Saudi Arabia is stepping up to its regional leadership role out here right now at a key time in terms of trying to restore stability in this key region of the world."

Saudi security forces have arrested more than 300 foreign nationals in the last two years for involvement in terrorist activities with Daesh.

Saudi Special Forces during a training demonstration, May 2015
During the last decade, the Saudi government has fundamentally restructured operations and coordination to better address national security threats and to prevent terrorist attacks. Much of this activity has been aimed at dismantling the physical presence of terrorists and the ability of militants to operate within the Kingdom.

To do so effectively, Saudi security forces maintain rigorous security standards and undertake continuous training on the latest best practices for combating terrorist threats. Security professionals regularly participate in joint programs throughout the world, including in Europe and the United States.

Saudi security agents also work with their international counterparts to conduct missions and exchange information. Saudi Arabia and the United States have established two joint task forces—one that pursues leads to terrorist activities and another that tracks terror financing. These efforts to enhance the sophistication of Saudi Arabia’s human resources have been complemented by the deployment of new technologies that assist in safeguarding the Kingdom.

In addition to adopting enhanced tactics to patrol the county’s desolate borderlands, the Saudi government has also implemented counterterrorism measures designed to confront threats in the Kingdom’s dense urban areas. Neighborhood police units engage and work directly with community members, encouraging citizens to provide tips and leads about suspicious activity. This approach has led to arrests of most-wanted terrorists and to the discovery of safe houses where terrorists were meeting, plotting and staging attacks.
“We are tremendously pleased with the work and sacrifice of our brave security men who operate out of loyalty for their nation and religion, guided by their belief in God while facing the dark terrorist groups that have violated the Qur’an and the Sunnah of the Prophet, peace be upon him, and follow the ways of Satan in shedding blood. Their crimes and harm extend near and far, sparing no father, brother, friend or relative their heinous acts through their actions, they revealed that they are a scourge that poses harm to the society, but their efforts are constantly thwarted, thanks to God, first, and then to the efforts of our heroic security men.”

THE CUSTODIAN OF THE TWO HOLY MOSQUES KING SALMAN BIN ABDULAZIZ IN A LETTER TO CROWN PRINCE MOHAMMAD BIN NAIF, DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF INTERIOR JANUARY 27, 2017
These activities - training, education, the inclusion of technology and community outreach - have allowed Saudi security forces to foil many terrorist plots within the Kingdom and to dismantle Al-Qaeda’s operations. They have also created an unwelcome environment to terrorists and extremists.

Despite their effectiveness, these activities have not come without sacrifice. In combating terrorist-related events, many Saudi security officers have died and hundreds have been wounded carrying out their duties. Casualty rates have decreased in recent years, as a result of improved training, experience and preventative activities—including increased efforts to combat the financing of terrorism and to eradicate the influence of extremist ideologies.

In addition to training courses for combating terrorists, Saudi Arabia has led numerous international counterterrorism conferences on subjects ranging from combating extremists ideology to combating terror financing. International conferences such as these give nations and international organizations an opportunity to meet and discuss best practices for combating terrorism. These conferences are critical to ending the threat of terrorism on global community.

Saudi Internal Security, Special Forces, and International Collaboration

Recent Actions by Saudi Arabia’s Special Operational Forces (SOF) and its sub-agencies: the Saudi Emergency Force (SEF) and Special Security Forces (SSF).

In early January 2017, the Ministry of Interior announced that Security Forces had arrested more than 300 foreign nationals from nine different nations in the last two years for involvement in terrorist activities with Daesh. In addition to these arrests, preemptive security operations by SSF that foiled terrorist plots throughout 2016 have included: thwarting planned attacks at a) the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina during the Pilgrimage season (September 2016); b) the U.S. consulate in Jeddah during Ramadan (July 2016); c) an international football match at the al Jawahara Stadium, also in Jeddah; d) a checkpoint in Damman in early August; and e) the tourist areas of the island of Tarout on the Arabian Gulf. They also prevented seven suicide attacks targeting a number of mosques in the region of Eastern Province.
In early 2017, Saudi Security Forces continued to disrupt planned attacks and to capture extremists. On January 7, Daesh-linked extremists Tayea Salem Yaslam Al-Sayari - known as a "suicide belt" maker for Daesh - and Talal Samran A-Saadi were killed during a shootout with police forces in the Riyadh neighborhood of Yasmeen. Two weeks later, two extremists blew themselves up after security forces cornered them in the Harazat residential area of Jeddah.

Throughout 2016 and into early 2017, Saudi security forces dismantled several terrorist cells and arrested dozens of individuals connected to terrorism. Pakistani national Abduallah Gulzar Khan was arrested for plotting the Ramadan suicide attack on the U.S. consulate in Jeddah. Yemeni national Omar Saeed Mahdi Bahdaissami was arrested for the murder of a Saudi corporal as he was leaving early morning prayer at a local mosque. Six other Yemeni nationals were arrested in connection with that attack. A Syrian national, Nasser Mohammed Shafiq Al-Barazi, and an accomplice were arrested for manufacturing explosive belts and preparing explosive materials for Daesh to use in the Kingdom. In addition, Egyptian national Hisham Mohammed Abdo was caught before attempting a suicide attack on a mosque in Al-Ahsa.

TERROR PLOTS FOILED BY SAUDI SPECIAL FORCES IN 2016

- Thwarting planned attacks at the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina during the Pilgrimage season
- Thwarted attack on the U.S. consulate in Jeddah during Ramadan
- Foiled a planned terror attack on an international football match at the al Jawahara Stadium, Jeddah
- Thwarted a terrorist attack at a checkpoint in Damman
- Foiled a terrorist attack on tourist areas of the island of Tarout on the Arabian Gulf
- Prevented seven suicide attacks targeting a number of mosques in Eastern Province
On September 19, 2016, Saudi Special Forces arrested 17 members of Daesh terror cells. Saudi authorities seized pipe bombs, weapons, ammunition, suicide vests and bomb-making materials in the raids. In a press conference, Ministry of Interior spokesman Major General Mansour Al-Turki said the terrorist cells had a list of targets that included civilians, religious scholars and security officers as well as the locations of military installations and economic targets.

In February, Daesh claimed responsibility for the murder of retired Brigadier General Ahmad Faya Asiri in the city of Jizan. On August 21, 2016, Ministry of Interior spokesperson Major General Mansour Al-Turki announced that security forces arrested Osama Ahmed Mohammed Al-Rajhi, a Yemeni national; Muwaffaq Saleh Sunaid Al-Harbi, a Saudi national; and Mohammad Ahmed Mohamed Al-Rajhi, another Yemeni national.

In addition, on June 3, 2016, security forces announced the arrests of three individuals, among them an imam at a mosque in Medina, suspected of supporting Daesh. These arrests highlighted the fact that there has been a marked increase in the presence of known individual terrorists and their related networks in the southwestern provinces of the country, and Saudi security operations have intensified there. For example, on May 5, 2016, security forces conducted two operations in Jeddah and the Taif provinces; the larger of these operations took place in Wadi Noman and involved sustained exchanges of gunfire with security forces and two suicide-bomb attacks.

Counterterrorism Operations and Exercises

On November 4, 2016, Saudi Special Security Forces simulated an attempt by a terrorist group to free a prisoner during his transfer from prison. The simulation was part of the tenth day of the Arab Gulf Security-1 exercises hosted by Bahrain. Saudi Special Security Forces carried out several operations during the exercise, which entailed dividing special operations forces and armored security forces, defusing and removing explosives, and coordinating with the air force. The security forces worked according to detailed plans to respond to a large number of possible scenarios.

In March 2016, the Special Forces took part in a 20-nation counterterrorism exercise called “North Thunder.” The three-week exercise took place along Saudi Arabia’s border region with Iraq and Kuwait, using conventional and unconventional warfare techniques as part of a wider strategy to develop a counterterrorism alliance of Islamic nations in the Middle East.

The Special Forces continue to conduct regular training with partner nations in the Middle East, including NATO allies such as the French Special Forces Command (Commandement des Opérations Spéciales). These training programs focus particularly on interoperability.
In October 2015, the SSF took part in a joint training exercise with Pakistan’s Special Services Group aimed at improving interoperability in counterterrorism and counterinsurgency operations and developing associated tactics, techniques and procedures (TTPs) in rugged environments.

Collaboration with the United States

Saudi Arabia and the United States have a longstanding relationship dating back to the 1930s, when American businessmen first traveled to the Kingdom to help develop the country’s natural resources. Today, the Saudi-U.S. relationship is stronger than ever. A major reason for the strength of this vital partnership has been the cooperation between the two countries on matters related to security and intelligence. Both nations are committed to rooting out the sources of terrorism.

On February 10, 2017, Central Intelligence Agency Director Mike Pompeo presented Crown Prince Mohammed bin Naif, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Interior, with the George Tenet Medal in recognition of his efforts in the fight against terrorism. The award reflects the close cooperation between the CIA and the Ministry of Interior, particularly over the past decade-and-a-half.

NSA-MOD

The U.S. National Security Agency (NSA) collaborates with the Kingdom’s Ministry of Defense, focusing on internal security and terrorist activity on the Arabian Peninsula. This partnership has been conducted within the framework of the CIA’s relationship with the Kingdom’s Ministry of Interior—specifically, the Mabahith, or General Directorate for Investigations (GDI—roughly analogous to parts of the FBI). While structured in distinct divisions, the GDI works alongside the Special Security Forces (under the Assistant Minister for Security Affairs) and the Special Emergency Forces, which report directly to the Minister of the Interior.

U.S. SWAT TEAM MODEL

The Saudi Special Security Forces (SSF) is modeled after the special weapons and tactics (SWAT) teams employed by U.S. law enforcement and comprises some 500 operatives across 13 centers throughout the country. The SSF is the counterterrorism unit of Saudi Arabian General Security within the MOI and is funded through allocations within the Defense budget. The operations of the SSF include: a) counterterrorism operations "in all forms and methods," b) VIP protection at home and abroad, c) aviation protection for local and international flight; d) to guard and protect country embassies abroad in coordination with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs e) Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) and Counter-Improvished Explosive Devices (C-IED) f) protection of critical installations and facilities, g) supporting other security sectors and helping to maintain security during the Hajj in cases of disasters and crises.

“We, God willing, continue to confront terrorism and extremism everywhere, and with thanks to God we have managed to thwart many terrorist plots. We are surrounded by areas of conflict, and we were the first [nation] affected by terrorism from various sources, but we are equipped to combat terror in any place and under any circumstances.”

U.S.-Built Military Bases

U.S. Army and Air Force engineers designed and constructed Saudi military bases in Taif, Khamis Mushait and Hafar Al-Batin. The latter, King Khalid Military City in Hafar Al-Batin, was built to defend the Kingdom's northeastern border and was used to house thousands of American and other coalition soldiers during the Gulf War.

In February 2016, the base played host to a large-scale military maneuver, North Thunder. Approximately 150,000 soldiers, 2,540 warplanes, 20,000 tanks, and 460 helicopters participated in the largest military exercise in the history of the region. Twenty Arab and Muslim countries and the GCC-formed Peninsula Shield took part in the drill, led by Saudi Arabia.

The United States Military Training Mission

(USMTM) to Saudi Arabia is a special Security Assistance and Security Cooperation organization under the authority of the chief of the U.S. diplomatic mission. From March 30 to April 19, 2016, U.S. Army Special Forces teams conducted combined training with the Royal Saudi Land Forces 1st Airborne Brigade in Tabuk, in the northwestern part of the Kingdom. Training included small-arms marksmanship; machine-gun, mortar and anti-tank weapons training; land navigation; and counter-IED. The training culminated in a maneuvered live-fire raid coordinated by U.S. Special Forces team leadership.

Collaboration with International Organizations

INTERPOL

In mid-2016, Saudi Interpol announced plans to link internal sections of its databases to the General Secretariat of Interpol based in Lyon, France, in order to ensure a more effective and efficient method of investigation.

In February 2016, Saudi Interpol detained an Indian doctor, Sabeel Ahmed, for his involvement in a 2012 plot to recruit people for the terror group Lashkar-e-Taiba.
“I can tell you even to this day there are plots directly targeting the U.S. homeland that would not have been disrupted without the assistance of Saudi Arabia. I can’t think of another ally that plays a more important role than Saudi Arabia does in our counterterrorism fight and our ability secure our own homeland.”

JULY 20, 2016

On December 15, 2016, Interpol’s Director for Saudi Arabia Major General Mohammed bin Ali Al-Zabin concluded a new cooperation agreement with Saudi Arabian Airlines in which Interpol and the airline would coordinate the transfer of wanted and convicted persons.

On September 17, 2015, the Kingdom chaired a meeting of the heads of Interpol’s National Central Bureaus in the Middle East and North Africa. Interpol member states agreed to double the exchange of information that is recorded in the Interpol database, particularly with regard to terrorist offenses and foreign terrorist fighters. The meeting also resulted in 18 new initiatives on Interpol capacity-building to prevent the infiltration of terrorist elements and improve border security.

In January 2014, Interpol and Saudi Arabia strengthened fugitive investigations, in-clusiong electronic surveillance. Interpol-Riyadh arranged for its frontline police officers across the country to have direct access to Interpol’s global databases.

In March 2011, the first Arabic Interpol mobile police training program took place at the Naif Arab University for Security Sciences in Riyadh with participation by investigative units from Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Sudan and Yemen.

United Nations Counter Terrorism Center

In September 2011, Saudi Arabia signed an agreement with the United Nations to create the United Nations Counter Terrorism Center (UNCCT) and donated $10 million to its establishment. The initiative for this center was conceived in 2005, when the late King Abdullah held the “Counter-Terrorism International Conference” in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

The UNCCT was established within the international body’s Counterterrorism Implementation Task Force (CTITF) to promote international cooperation on counterterrorism through the implementation of the UN’s Global Counterterrorism Strategy.

In 2014, King Abdullah provided the Center with a donation of $100 million to enhance its capabilities and effectiveness in helping countries combat terrorism. Other donors include the U.S., the U.K., Norway and Germany. The Center consists of an Advisory Board of 21 member states including the U.S., the U.K., Russia, China, Germany, France, Switzerland and numerous Arab and Muslim States.

To date, the UNCCT has initiated more than 30 non-military counterterrorism projects around the world at the global, regional and national levels. Working alongside the Security Council Counterterrorism Committee, the Saudi-funded program initiated two programs in the latter half of 2016:

- The Counter Foreign Terrorist Fighters (FTF) Program targets FTFs in Syria and Iraq and prevents their radicalization and their recruitment by Daesh, the Al-Nusra Front and groups affiliated with Al-Qaeda, as well as inhibiting
Interpol Red Notices

In January 2011, Interpol released “Red Notices” – international notices for wanted-individuals that amount to arrests warrants for all member countries of Interpol (save for the United Kingdom) – for 47 terror suspects wanted by the Kingdom. Interpol’s General Secretariat Headquarters in Lyon issued the notices at the request of its National Central Bureau (NCB) in Riyadh; the Interpol NCB for Saudi Arabia is part of the Ministry of the Interior and partners with the Kingdom’s General Directorate of Investigation.

In March 2009, Saudi Arabia and Interpol published the largest-ever issue of Red Notices for more than 80 suspected terrorists with links to Al-Qaeda in Iraq and in Afghanistan.

A ‘Red Notice’ can be requested by any Interpol member country. It is placed in the central database and added to foreign law enforcement databases and is sent to all 187 member countries with details of terror suspects to help those enforcement officials world-wide in their search. The notice remains in effect until the wanted fugitive is extradited. (Interpol does not have authority to arrest individuals who are the subject of a Red Notice. Only the law enforcement authorities of the Interpol member country where the individual is located have the legal authority to make an arrest). Of the Red Notices issued by Saudi Arabia since 2011, thirteen arrests have been made, while three Notices--those of a Jordanian man, a citizen of the United Kingdom, and a Saudi citizen--have been dismissed. The Kingdom has also stepped up efforts to cooperate regionally: In June 2016, Jordan’s Interpol office in Amman received a wanted suspect from Saudi Arabia, authorized under an order issued by Jordan’s Public Security Department.

their travel to and from these areas.

- The Advance Passenger Information Program is based on U.S. Customs and Border Protection’s system for collecting personal information on air travelers when they book their flights to prevent terrorists from boarding aircraft.
“Combating terrorism is an international obligation that requires global cooperation in efforts, at all levels, to confront it—in security, intellectually, in the media and militarily—remembering that such cooperation shall be in accordance with the rules of international law and the founding principles of the UN, the first of which is equality of sovereignty.”

In order to combat terror financing, Saudi Arabia has put in place one of the strictest financial control systems in the world.

Saudi delegation attends the Counter-ISIL Finance Group, October 24, 2016
Illicit funding allows terrorist networks to thrive. In order to combat the threat posed by terrorist financing, Saudi Arabia has worked diligently to put in place one of the strictest financial control systems in the world. Saudi Arabia works very closely with its allies on all fronts to destroy terror groups' access to financial systems. In recent years, the Kingdom has undertaken a number of measures to combat money laundering and realized a number of accomplishments in preventing terrorist financing.

According to the U.S. Department of State’s 2015 International Narcotics Control Strategy Report (INCSR), published in December 2016, Saudi Arabia has enacted legislation in all of the following areas critical to cutting off funds for terrorist organizations:

1) the criminalization of drug-money laundering;
2) the criminalization of money laundering beyond drugs;
3) ‘Know-Your-Customer’ provisions;
4) the reporting of large banking transactions;
5) the reporting of suspicious banking transactions;
6) the maintenance of banking records over time;
7) disclosure protection;
8) the official criminalization of terrorist financing;
9) the reporting of suspected terrorist financing;
10) cross-border transportation of currency;
11) the establishment of financial intelligence units;
12) an international law enforcement cooperation system for identification;
13) the ability to freeze terrorist activity without delay;
14) as a state party to the 1988 UN Drug Convention;
15) as a state party to United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC).
Furthermore, in response to the efforts of terrorist organizations to exploit the sympathies of Saudi citizens, the Kingdom has established new laws or considerably strengthened laws in place designed to ensure that charitable contributions are not diverted from authentic humanitarian organizations. Riyadh has issued instructions to a number of agencies prohibiting the transfer of funds by charitable organizations to recipients outside Saudi Arabia, except with Foreign Ministry approval and subject to stringent reporting requirements. The Kingdom reformed its banking laws in order to require that charitable organizations have single-disbursement bank accounts, as well as an approved official with signatory authority, in order to maintain tighter controls over these accounts.

“[Saudi Arabia is] the target of extremists. We have suffered in terms of terrorist attacks, we have suffered in terms of loss of security personnel trying to defend the innocent, we are the forefront of fighting extremism and terrorism in the region and in the world. And so for somebody to say the Saudis are funding extremism or [that] their ideology is funding extremism is preposterous.”

HIS EXCELLENCY ADEL BIN AHMED AL-JUBEIR
MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS
PRESS CONFERENCE, JULY 21, 2016
Parallel to this, new rules have been codified concerning the opening of bank accounts by charities, including requiring one single account for each charity, with sub-accounts permitted only for the purpose of receiving deposits. Particularly stringent in this regard is the fact that no ATM or credit cards can be issued for these accounts and that all payments may be made only by checks payable to the first beneficiary for deposit in a Saudi bank.

Across Saudi Arabia, all unlicensed money-exchange houses have been shut down, while the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency, the financial oversight authority founded in 2003, conducts tight supervision of so-called "informal" money-transfer houses used to send funds abroad. The establishment of a financial intelligence unit (the Saudi Arabian Financial Intelligence Unit, or SAFIU), in compliance with the standards of the G7’s Financial Action Task Force (FATF), provided for the collection and sharing of information on suspicious financial transactions. In 2015, Saudi Arabia intensified its campaign against money laundering by requiring financial institutions to verify customers’ identities and by placing restrictions on non-residents’ ability to open accounts in the country.

Saudi Arabia has also worked to target individuals and entities providing assistance to terrorist organizations. The U.S. Department of the Treasury noted in March 2016 that Saudi security forces killed a number of high-profile Al-Qaeda financiers, including Yousif Salih Fahad Al-Ayeeri and Khaled Ali Al-Hajj, central facilitators of the organization. In addition to these operations, the Kingdom has placed sanctions on entities that assist in terror financing, including joint designations with the U.S. against the Al Ayeeri Foundation, Al-Hajj and others.

Financial Counterterrorism Efforts

Saudi Arabia has implemented a number of financial regimes and institutions to effectively regulate the financial sector. These include:

- The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA) requires all financial institutions within the Kingdom's jurisdiction to implement all recommendations for combating money laundering and the financing of terrorism issued by the Financial Action Task Force (FATF).
- Saudi Arabia established money-laundering units in SAMA and all local banks to ensure the banking system is not exploited by money laundering operations. These units are responsible for reporting dubious transactions to the authorities.

- Saudi Arabia established a money intelligence department to monitor and investigate any suspicious financial transactions. Investigations are typically done in coordination with the SAMA and Saudi banks.
- Saudi authorities have closed down unlicensed money-exchange or money-transfer centers.
- Saudi Arabia established a financial intelligence unit (FIU) and is a member of the Egmont Group, a Toronto-based international body consisting of 152 national Financial Intelligence Units (FIUs) formed in 1995 to exchange information on money laundering and terror-financing.
- Saudi Arabia earned observer status in the FATF in 2015 and anticipates full membership in 2018.

Preventing the Misuse of Saudi Charitable Contributions

Terror networks often gain access to funds by hiding behind charitable organizations, preying on the sympathies of Saudi citizens seeking to support philanthropic causes. The Saudi government has put into place a variety of rules and regulations to prevent the manipulation of good-will and charity.

- Saudi charities are prohibited from transferring money abroad.
- Saudi charities cannot operate abroad except through the King Salman Humanitarian Aid and Relief Center or the Saudi Red Crescent, a quasi-government entity.
- The collection of cash contributions in mosques and public places is prohibited. The Kingdom has instituted a thorough vetting of religious clerics to ensure charitable giving is not misdirected. The government suspended more than 1,000 clerics in 2013 and 900 clerics in 2014 on the grounds of negligence with regard to this requirement.
- Saudi Arabia monitors all appeals for charitable funds via television, the internet and social media, and operates a hotline for private citizens to contact authorities to report suspected activity related to terrorism or terror finance.
- In February 2016, SAMA announced that bank accounts for collecting donations solicited on social media and SMS messages would be frozen. The new regulation follows a decree that all citizens and NGOs wishing to establish a charitable project in another country must receive permission from the Saudi Ministry of the Interior before setting up operations in that country.

International Cooperation in Combating Terrorist Financing

The globalization of financial and banking networks necessitates effective coordination between governments to ensure that funds are not falling into the wrong hands. Terrorist financing has required the formulation and implementation of international regimes aimed to stem the flow of illicit money and cut off organizations from resources.

Saudi Arabia currently has Financial Action Task Force Observer status. This status requires a full endorsement of FATF practices. Saudi Arabia is currently a member of that body's sub-set organization, the Middle East and North Africa Financial Action Task Force (MENAFATF). Throughout 2016, the Kingdom continued to implement compliance standards and undergo "mutual assessment" procedures for full membership in the FATF, set for June 2018.

Abdulaziz Saleh Al-Furaih, Vice Governor of SAMA, stated: "We cannot discuss compliance and combating money laundering apart from terrorist financing. If money laundering is a crime, terrorist financing is a much graver crime." The statement was made during the Eighth Forum on Compliance and Combating Money Laundering held in Riyadh on May 9, 2016, one of many such conferences the Kingdom has held since earning FATF observer status. At the conference, the Kingdom reiterated its commitment to:

- Establish money laundering units in SAMA and in all local banks to ensure the banking system is not exploited and to report any dubious transactions to the authorities;
- Issue any necessary new rules and regulations for combating money laundering and terror financing as these may arise;
- Implement Know-Your-Customer rules in financial and non-financial institutions;
- Establish a permanent intergovernmental agency committee to oversee all issues pertaining to terror financing;
• Circulate lists issued by the UN to freeze financial assets of suspected terrorist individuals or groups;
• Continue to strengthen the country’s Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU).

THE UNITED NATIONS

On August 23, 2007, the Kingdom ratified the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (adopted by the UN General Assembly in December 1999). This convention, ratified by 187 countries as of 2015, mandates the identification, detection and freezing or seizure of funds used or allocated with the purpose of committing terrorist offenses; the forfeiture of funds used or allocated for the purpose of committing acts of terrorism and any proceeds derived therefrom; and requires of signatories “the greatest measure of assistance” in connection with criminal investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings in respect of terrorist acts. State parties commit themselves not to use bank secrecy as a justification for refusing to cooperate in the suppression of terrorist financing.

UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTIONS 1267, 1333, 1373

The Kingdom supported the following requirements of various UN Resolutions related to combating terrorism:

• Freezing of funds and other financial assets of terrorist regimes based on UN Security Council Resolution 1267.
• Freezing of funds of listed individuals related to terrorist activity based on UN Security Council Resolution 1333.
• The signing of the International Convention for Suppression and Financing of Terrorism based on UN Resolution 1373.
• Reporting to the UN Security Council the implementation of Resolution 1390.

Recent Cooperation

Saudi Arabia works in tandem with its international partners to place sanctions on entities that assist in terror financing. Since 2004, the Kingdom has worked with the U.S. Department of the Treasury to identify and publicize terror-finance related individuals and front-groups, while the Kingdom has legally formalized such designations. Many of these individuals are included on the UN Sanctions list pursuant to that body’s counterterrorism legal regime.

On October 20, 2016, Saudi Arabia designated two individuals and one business as supporters of terrorism over their links to Hezbollah, the international terror group closely tied to the Iranian Revolutionary Guards. Those sanctioned are Lebanese nationals Muhammad Al-Mukhtar Falah Kallas and Hasan Jamal-al-Din, and the Iraq-and Lebanon-based Global Cleaners S.A.R.L. The individuals and business sanctioned were designated under the Saudi Law of Terrorism Crimes and Financing and Royal Decree A/44. Under the law, any assets connected to the sanctioned entities under Saudi jurisdiction are frozen, and Saudi citizens or residents are generally prohibited from engaging in any transactions with the individuals or entities.

In March 2016, the U.S. and Saudi Arabia took joint action to disrupt the fundraising and support networks of various terrorist groups by imposing sanctions on several individuals and organizations with ties across the Middle East, Pakistan and Afghanistan. This follows the designation in 2015 of 17 individuals identified as Daesh officials and financial facilitators.

The U.S. State Department’s Bureau of Counterterrorism and Countering Violent Extremism in its Country Reports on Terrorism 2015, released June 2, 2016, reported that the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is cooperating with U.S. requests for access to certified bank records. It said the action was “based on reciprocity and increased cooperation on identification of foreign terrorist fighters (FTFs) traveling to Syria and Iraq.” The move was a breakthrough in U.S-Saudi cooperation given the absence of a formal mutual legal assistance treaty between the two countries. The agreement was negotiated between the Department of Justice’s Office of International Affairs and the Saudi Ministry of the Interior’s (MOI) Department of Legal Affairs and International Cooperation. The International Center for Counterterrorism in The Hague estimated in October 2016 that there were 35,000 FTFs in Syria and Iraq with Daesh.

Saudi Arabia is also working with its allies to deploy new and effective financing-tracking methods to prevent travel and support for foreign terrorist fighters.
(FTFs). For instance, Saudi Arabia and the U.S. are working directly with banks to determine the whereabouts, activities and intentions of their account and card holders. Enhanced cooperation in recent years has assisted in identifying and capturing foreign fighters.

Counter-ISIL Finance Group

Saudi Arabia serves as a co-chair of the Counter ISIL Finance Group (CIFG), alongside the U.S. and Italy. The CIFG was established in 2015 to disrupt ISIL's sources of revenue and its ability to move and use funds to wage its campaign of terror.

The group most recently met in October 2016, hosted by the U.S. Department of the Treasury, to pursue the following objectives: 1) to prevent Daesh from accessing the international financial system; 2) to counter the extortion and exploitation of assets and resources that transit, enter, or originate from Daesh-held territory; 3) to deny Daesh funding from abroad; and 4) to prevent Daesh from providing financial or material support to foreign affiliates.

BACKGROUND ON THE ELIMINATION OF MONEY-TRANSFER CENTER NETWORKS

As of 2015, Saudi Arabia had effectively eliminated the nationwide network of money-transfer centers that were used for many years as terrorist-financing vehicles under the guise of "charities." After the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, the U.S. Department of the Treasury initiated the Terrorist Finance Tracking Program (TFTP) to identify, track and pursue terrorists and their networks. The United States has worked closely with the Kingdom to track and close down illicit money-transfer centers.

As part of this cooperation, Saudi Arabia established its Anti-Money Laundering/Combating the Financing of Terrorism (AML/CFT) regime, providing a statutory basis for criminalizing money laundering and terrorist financing activities. Article II of this law created the Saudi Arabian Financial Intelligence Unit (SAFIU), which is responsible for receiving and analyzing reports on suspicious transactions, and comprises 130 officers. By February 2016, some 196 suspected terrorist financiers had been arrested by that body.
Article X of the Anti-Money Laundering Statute requires Saudi financial institutions to continue to develop their AML/CTF training programs which, in turn, are reviewed annually for adequacy.

Saudi Arabia’s comprehensive crackdown on illicit money transfers - developed in earnest since 2004 through the present day - was later praised by an official of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), who remarked that the Kingdom’s new regulations to control suspicious financial transactions "probably go further than any country in the world."

Saudi Legal Regimes and Compliance

The Saudi government has worked aggressively to pass and implement laws on terror financing that stem the flow of financial resources to terrorist organizations.

Originally approved in December 2013 and subsequently updated in 2015, the Saudi Council of Ministers passed its Penal Law Concerning Crimes of Terrorism and Its Financing, signed into law by the late King Abdullah in February 2014. This legislation added 41 new laws to the country’s existing counterterrorism laws. Among its provisions, this law:

- Gives the Minister of the Interior the power to issue arrest warrants against those suspected of having committed terrorist crimes and to delegate this power as he sees fit "according to guidelines he prescribes;" and;
- Defines terrorist crime as: "Any act undertaken by the offender directly or indirectly in pursuance of an individual or collective criminal enterprise intended to disturb the public order, destabilize the security of society or the stability of the state, expose its national unity to danger, obstruct the implementation of the organic law or some of its provisions, harm the reputation of the state or its standing, endanger any of the state facilities or its natural resources, force any of its authorities to do or abstain from doing something, or threaten to carry out actions leading to any of the aforementioned objectives or encourage their accomplishment."
In addition, Royal Order A/44 (Article IV) Against Terrorism of March 2014 formally declared Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, Al-Qaeda in Iraq, Al-Nusra Front (Syria), Hezbollah in the Kingdom (also known as Hezbollah in the Hijaz), the Muslim Brotherhood and the Houthis as terrorist organizations.

Furthermore, the Order authorized the formation of a committee that includes members from across the government to file a list of factions affiliated with the aforementioned organizations.

Additionally, the Order criminalizes the following:

- Providing financial or material donations to or funding of extremist and terroristic organizations, factions and groups, or sheltering their members or their promoters inside or outside the Kingdom;
- Contacting or communicating with groups or factions or individuals who harbor enmity for the Kingdom;
- Being loyal to, in liaison with, or communicating with another country with the intention of exploiting the secure unity and stability of the Kingdom and its people;
- Committing offenses against other countries and/or their leaders;
- Soliciting the help of States, international organizations or bodies against the Kingdom;
- Taking part in, calling for, or promoting fighting in conflicts in other countries, or issuing fatwas that encourage cross-border foreign terrorist fighting.
“We have faced more than 63 terror attacks by Al Qaeda and ISIL, 26 of them just in the last two years. More than 200 citizens and policemen were killed in terrorist attacks. More than 2800 suspects have been arrested since 2015. We have assured and enforced laws which criminalize all sorts of terrorist-related activities, including involvement in conflicts or financing terrorist or extremist groups. We have classified and announced a list of terrorist organizations, we have taken major actions to prevent radicalization and protect the community in Saudi Arabia with a private phone number to report suspicious activity. We have established a major intelligence department to monitor and investigate any suspected financial transactions. This is usually done in coordination with the Saudi Monetary Agency and the banks. This led to convicting more than 226 persons in terrorist financing activities, prosecuting more than 240 suspects, freezing and investigating more than 117 suspected accounts, closing all unlicensed charity collection locations. Also, in the international effort we have contributed to international community efforts to combat terrorism and its finance through exchanging information and some of that information has helped in saving lives in other countries.”

GENERAL MANSOUR AL-TURKI
SPokesMAN OF THE MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR
PRESS BRIEFING WITH U.S. JOURNALISTS
JUNE 8, 2016
The King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue (KACND), uses digital media to fight against sectarianism. Saudi Arabia’s “war of ideas” works to instill the concepts of moderation and tolerance, and undermine any intellectual or religious justifications for extremism and terrorism.
The Mindset
Combating Extremism

Attacking extremism at its psychological and ideological roots—and not merely cracking down militarily on its manifestations—is a critical component of Saudi Arabia’s strategy to defeat terrorism. From public awareness campaigns to establishing counter-radicalization and rehabilitation programs, Saudi Arabia’s “war of ideas” works to instill the concepts of moderation and tolerance, and undermine any intellectual or religious justifications for extremism and terrorism. The multi-faceted campaign aims to protect vulnerable groups, such as the youth, among other potentially disenfranchised members of society.

Fighting radical religious beliefs in the Kingdom is an immense challenge. The Kingdom’s counterterrorism-education measures focus on communicating the distinguishing aspects of the true Islamic faith in contrast to those individuals and entities whose actions are centered on the intentional misrepresentation or the degradation of its teachings.

These measures include, but are not limited to, counseling and conferences led by the Riyadh-based King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue (KACND) and the Vienna-based King Abdullah International Center for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue (KAICIID); and a Sakinah “Tranquility” campaign that is run by an independent NGO with support from the Ministry of Islamic Affairs.

The following reflects initiatives the Kingdom has implemented to counter extremist mentality and promote moderation and tolerance among its citizenry. More detail on these programs are provided in the sections that follow.
Public Awareness Campaign: This ongoing public awareness campaign reinforces Islam’s true values and educates Saudi citizens about the dangers of extremism and terrorism. The campaign includes advertisements on television, radio, billboards and online, as well as programs on television, in schools and mosques, and at sporting events.

A public service announcement produced in Saudi Arabia provides an example of efforts to curb online extremisms, in particular. This public service announcement, released by the King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue in June 2015, generated more than 150,000 views in the first 48 hours after its release.

The text of the public service announcement ran as follows:

"What is the greatest destroyer of nations and peoples? Disease? Natural disasters? Famine? Perhaps. But there is a hidden killer worse than all of them. A killer many of us don’t know, but who has claimed hundreds of thousands of lives — children, women, the elderly. And it doesn’t stop at killing people. It destroys states. It bleeds their resources, wrecks economies, and stifles knowledge. It brings states back to zero — to less than zero.

Shall I surprise you some more? The killer lives among us. Right now, at this very moment, he walks around free and loose. He might be near you, in the same building. He might be right beside you. He might be your dearest friend, or your closest relative. Shall I shock you even more? The hidden killer might be ... YOU. You think you are innocent? Think again. Go over your convictions and ideas. Think back on the grudges you bear. Lots of people like you thought they were innocent, but became wild animals. They ruined their own states, destroying them with enormity. Hundreds of thousands of dead and wounded.

This killer, sleeping inside you, wakes up the moment you give up on the value of coexistence. You transform into a killer, because the fire of hate has been ignited. Dividing people into categories. Insularity. When you fail to live together with people who are different than you, you grow wild. The result? A devastating war. Its soldiers are you and thousands like you, all from a single country. Then come years of conflict. No one wins except for death. The country falls behind the rest of the world. Resources are wasted that could have been invested for everyone to make a better life, to build a solid economy, to strengthen security, to support teaching and knowledge. It might have been possible for everyone together to avoid this disaster if everyone thought about coexistence and rowed on both sides of the lifeboat, rather than vanish into a whirlpool.

On your way to work, or when you enter your home and are among your family, always ask yourself — is a dispute worth losing all of this? Coexistence. Let’s talk to each other, let’s live together.

• Public and Religious Education: The program audits curriculum material to vet and eliminate extremist-related material, as well as introduce enhanced teaching methods and provide better training for educators. Imams have been prohibited from incitement and talk of intolerance, and the Ministry of Islamic Affairs is conducting a program to educate imams and monitor mosques and religious education to purge extremism and intolerance.

• Global Interfaith Dialogue Initiative: Launched an international effort to promote interfaith dialogue. In early 2008, Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Abdullah bin Abdulaziz launched the interfaith dialogue as a way to underscore the commonalities among the world’s religions. To initiate this endeavor, King Abdullah convened a meeting on June 4, 2008 of more than 500 Muslim scholars from around the world. The conference highlighted the importance of dialogue and emphasized the need for the faiths and cultures of the world to combat extremism and intolerance. This was followed by the World Conference on Dialogue in Spain on July 16, 2008. The conference, hosted by King Abdullah and King Juan Carlos I of Spain, brought together 300 delegates from around the world representing Islam, Buddhism, Christianity, Confucianism, Hinduism, Judaism and Shintoism. The culmination of this dialogue initiative was a special session of the United Nations General Assembly on November 12, 2008, attended by more than 25 world leaders.

• United Nations Counterterrorism Center: The Kingdom is the founder and primary funder of the United Nations Counterterrorism Center, with more than $100 million in donations from the Kingdom to date and more than 30 non-military counterterrorism projects around the world at the global, regional and national levels aimed at fighting the twin evils of terrorism financing and terrorist indoctrination.

- Counter-Radicalization and Rehabilitation: In addition to public awareness campaigns to prevent the spread of terrorist ideologies, Saudi Arabia has taken direct, focused steps to neutralize sources of extremism. For example, the Ministry of the Interior has been working in conjunction with King Fahd Security College and Naif Arab University for Security Sciences to develop and refine training for public security professionals. The rehabilitation program for detainees is the longest continually functioning program in the world, and several countries are establishing similar programs based on the Kingdom’s model.

Saudi counter-radicalization efforts are a model for other nations around the world. The Government of Malaysia, for example, announced in November 2016 that it would send 10 senior security specialists to Saudi Arabia to study at the Prince Mohammad bin Naif Center for Security Studies. "We want to benefit from the experience of the Kingdom in counseling and countering extremist ideology with moderation, argument and proof," said Zainol Rahim Zainuddin, the Malaysian Ambassador to Saudi Arabia. Malaysian Prime Minister Ahmad Zahid Hamidi said that he had discussed with King Salman solutions to protect Southeast Asian countries from the threat of terrorism carried out by Daesh, which has recruited individuals from these countries.

In the discussion, an understanding was reached that Saudi Arabia and Malaysia would continue to exchange knowledge on experiences with combating terrorism and extremist ideology. In addition, Prime Minister Hamidi praised the counseling practices applied by Saudi Arabia, pointing to the Prince Mohammad bin Naif Center for Counseling and Care as a "unique model to counter extremist ideology with moderate ideology." Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, Yemen, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia, and the United States military through "Task Force 134" in Iraq have also modeled their counter-radicalization programs after Saudi Arabia’s approach.
On November 23, 2016, Ben Emmerson, the UN Special Envoy on Counterterrorism and Human Rights, praised prison conditions of those accused of terrorism in the Kingdom as humane and focused on rehabilitation. He expressed admiration for humanitarian aid and psychological support provided by the Mohammad bin Naif Center to those accused of terrorism and their families, and allowing these families to become involved directly in the rehabilitation programs of detainees. After attending a trial session of those accused of plotting to assassinate the late King Abdullah, Emmerson said the condition of detainees or those accused of terrorism should be considered an example to be followed at the international level. He cited as well the level of professionalism and respect for human rights in Saudi prisons.

“The counseling center’s continuous support program does a great job at rehabilitating extremist young men and integrating them as efficient members in their societies through a series of programs and activities,” Emmerson said.

Overview: Recent Activity

The Kingdom’s religious establishment is fully engaged with the Saudi government in countering the mindset sustaining radical extremism.

Following the three simultaneous terror attacks of July 4, 2016, the imams of the Grand Mosque in Makkah and the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina vehemently condemned terrorism and urged waging a tough fight against the “evil goals” behind extremist organizations. On July 5, 2016, on the celebration of the Eid Al-Fitr, the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Salman bin Abdulaziz said in an address to all Muslims that the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia will "strike with an iron fist" the terror groups that seek to recruit youths to “extremism and violence,” and pledged efforts to "distance them from masterminds of misleading ideas." King Salman urged Muslims to unite, and condemned terrorism and extremism, stressing their contradiction to Islam.

On June 3, 2016, Saudi security services announced the arrest of terror suspects, including an imam at the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina suspected of supporting Daesh.
In his sermon of July 8, 2016, Sheikh Khalid Ali Al-Ghamedi, the Imam of the Grand Mosque in Makkah, described terrorism as “an outlandish phenomenon for Islam and in particular for Saudi Arabia, home to the two holiest mosques.”

On June 9, 2016, the Kingdom announced that it would install surveillance cameras inside and outside all mosques throughout the country. The long-term plan, announced by the Ministry of Islamic Affairs, includes setting up an operations room with links to 95,000 mosques.

In July 2016, at a conference of the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, King Salman made a series of remarks about the widespread phenomenon of online terrorist recruitment and incitement. He called on Saudi youth to take the initiative to counter extremists’ online activity with their own responses by arguing against strident interpretations of Islam and advancing their own, tolerant understanding of the religion instead. He also called on people of good conscience throughout the world - including state and non-state entities - to play their part in fighting extremism across the Internet and on social media.

In August 2016, the Deputy Minister of Islamic Affairs for Call and Guidance Tawfiq Al-Sudairi told Arab media that there are specific regulations and controls in place in the Kingdom to monitor religious activities and preaching. That ministry also monitors any preaching or writing in the guise of religious guidance that may lead to the spread of deviant ideologies.

The 19th International Conference on Processes of Radicalization and Deradicalization (ICPRD) Jan. 30-31 2017, Jeddah — The ICPRD convened leading scientists, researchers and scholars to exchange views, share their experiences and research all aspects of the processes of radicalization and deradicalization. The conference provided researchers, practitioners and educators an interdisciplinary forum to review the most recent innovations, trends, concerns and practical challenges encountered in the following areas: 1) “Processes of Radicalization and Deradicalization,” 2) “Analyzing the Positions of Terrorists,” 3) “Assessing Countering Violent Extremism Programs,” 4) “Assessing the Effectiveness of Deradicalization,” 5) “Beyond Terrorism: Deradicalization and Disengagement from Violent Extremism,” 6) “Care Rehabilitation,” 7) “Challenges in Assessing the Effectiveness of Deradicalization Programs,” 8) “Challenges in
"The Kingdom has been keen to combat terrorism based on its conviction that terrorism has no identity and no religion, and from its belief that the terrorists are committing these acts stemming from their deviant ideologies and evil thought. All negative religious, political and social ideologies that use religion as a tool, throughout human history, do not reflect the absolute truth about religion."

The Kingdom has undertaken the modernization of its educational system, reviewing curriculum materials and removing any teachers or professors who profess and inculcate extremist beliefs. The country promotes cultural exchange, sending and paying for tens of thousands of students to attend American universities not only to acquire scholarly and technical know-how and expertise, but to gain exposure to Western belief systems and world views.

In fall 2016, several prominent Saudi religious scholars, who had gathered at a conference on extremism, drew attention to the critical importance of the role played by scholars in disseminating factual information and revealing the unethical tactics of terrorists in trying to lure people away from the rightful path of Islam. Sheikh Abdullah bin Sulaiman Al-Manea, Member of the Council and Adviser to the Royal Court, highlighted the role of the authorities at the Ministry of Interior in ensuring the safety of Saudi Arabia in light of this trend.

As pointed out by Education Minister Dr. Ahmed Al-Issa, much effort has been made in the last decade to improve textbooks and make the education system respond to nation’s need to defeat and eventually eliminate extremism. Part of the challenge at hand is to move students away from rote learning and to stimulate critical thinking. The Kingdom also wants to better prepare young Saudis to compete in a global economy, as the government seeks to diversify its economy with new, non-petroleum sources of revenue and investment.
National Campaigns

To further combat radical ideology, government officials adopted a series of counterterrorism education measures aimed at undermining extremist views and at disrupting the activities of those who promote violent extremism. Led by the King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue (KACND) and the King Abdullah International Center for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue (KAICIID), these measures include, but are not limited to, a counseling program, a religious "Tranquility" campaign, public education campaigns, and a "Religious Authority" campaign.

KING ABDULAZIZ CENTER FOR NATIONAL DIALOGUE (KACND)

The National Dialogue Forum of the King Abdulaziz Center for National Dialogue (KACND) was instituted in June 2003 to debate reform and suggest remedies following the Al-Qaeda terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. Each of these meetings takes place in a different city in the Kingdom. As a forum, KACND has been described as "an independent national institution which seeks to strengthen channels of communication and dialogue between Saudi citizens and the different elements and institutions of Saudi society."

The Center’s objective “is to combat extremism and foster a pure atmosphere that give[s] rise to wise positions and illuminating ideas that reject terrorism and terrorist thought.”

KACND has intensified its efforts to boost national cohesion through societal engagement to combat extremism and deviant ideology. On Oct. 6, 2016, the center announced a new initiative, dubbed “Talahom,” to promote meetings that

“The greatest and most appalling of all sins is for anyone to deliberately and premeditatedly shed the blood of innocent people...wreak chaos and havoc and undermine security and stability in order to achieve the evil goals of criminal gangs and sectarian terrorist organizations.”

Sheikh Khalid Ali Al-Ghamedi

put into practice the principles of co-existence and national unity. Faisal Al-Muammar, the secretary general of KACND, stressed the initiative’s importance as the first step in multiple projects run by the center in the coming year. He added that these types of projects preserve and enhance the Kingdom’s security and strengthen national unity based on shared values.

“The sedition witnessed in the Islamic world today requires all of us to exert the utmost effort to unify our voice, close ranks and work together to solve the problems of the Islamic nation, and achieve victory for its issues. However, the biggest challenge facing our Islamic nation is how to keep our youth, the real wealth and hope of the future, away from the dangers facing them – particularly extremism and violence – and distance them from masterminds of misleading ideas that force them to behave in extraordinary ways that contradict the principles of our Islamic religion and the pillars and values of our Islamic societies.”

Similar messages stressing the need of those radicalized or at risk of radicalization have been broadcast on Saudi television and radio and at sporting events. Schools, mosques and even the screens of automated teller machines feature such messages. Ministries and government bodies have participated in this campaign by organizing symposiums, exhibitions and lectures, as well as by distributing materials to combat extremism and promote balanced, centrist views and moderation.

MONITORING OF RELIGIOUS PREACHING

Imams who preach intolerance or hate toward others are dismissed, punished or retrained. To date, the Ministry of Islamic Affairs has fired over 400 imams, 'khateeb’—those who deliver religious sermons— and muezzin—those who call Muslims to prayer. The ministry has additionally suspended approximately 1500 others who were ordered to join a multi-year “enlightenment program” devoted to educating imams and monitoring religious preaching. In recurring legislation since 2007, the Kingdom’s civil service first announced, and now regularly implements, the dismissal of teachers who espouse extremist views. In 2015, the Ministry of Islamic Affairs intensified an earlier initiative to impose electronic monitoring of all mosques in Saudi Arabia using the Geographic Information Systems (GIS). The project allows the Ministry to monitor day-to-day activities in any mosque, including prayers and ceremonies.

Saudi government and religious leaders have publicly and routinely condemned terrorism and extremism. In May 2009, the Second Deputy Prime Minister of Saudi Arabia organized the first national conference on “intellectual security,” which was to address the “intellectual abnormality” that, according to the Saudi government, is “the main reason for terrorism.” These conferences have since been ongoing, the declaration of which is the moderate nature of Islam and warnings against “the dangers of embracing deviant ideologies.” The National Dialogue campaigns against extremism have been ongoing in various cities in Saudi Arabia since 2003, most recently on Feb. 7, 2017.

Related to this campaign, The King Abdullah International Center for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue (KAICIID) convened the second annual meeting of the Board of Directors’ Advisory Forum on Feb. 6-7, 2017, at KAICIID headquarters in Vienna.
KAICIID Secretary General Faisal bin Abdulrahman bin Muaammar described the session as a milestone in which the Advisory Forum laid “the foundation for the Forum’s development in the coming decades. In particular, the Forum’s task forces are vehicles to focus on creating change in four thematic areas: "Interreligious Dialogue Training," "Governance and Common Citizenship," "Reconciliation" and "Capacity Building." The Center is particularly focused on Iraq and Syria as part of its anti-extremism goals.

In early January 2017, the Saudi Embassy in Beirut sponsored an interfaith meeting on the topic "Lebanon unites us" in order to strengthen Saudi-Lebanese relations and to promote Christian-Muslim understanding. Saudi Chargé d’Affaires Walid Bukhari organized the national interfaith meeting at the Saudi diplomatic mission following a rapprochement that began with the official visit to Saudi Arabia by the President of Lebanon Michel Aoun in January.

Supported by the Ministry of Islamic Affairs, the Sakinah “Tranquility” Campaign partners with Islamic scholars who engage potential radicalized online users seeking religious knowledge. These scholars work to direct their focus away from extremists source. The campaign has received praise by American and British officials, and has inspired other nations, including the United Arab Emirates and

“The most dangerous thing is not the textbook itself but the way the textbooks are translated by the teachers to the students. What we are trying to do—opening the system—will help us make students participate and become active learners, which is a very powerful tool to eliminate and reduce any extreme views.”

PUBLIC EDUCATION CAMPAIGNS

The Ministry of Education regularly audits school textbooks and curricula to ensure that teachers do not espouse intolerance and extremism, and a government-sponsored program requires the removal any curriculum element that is radical and inconsistent with Islam. Also in place is a special training program to promote religious tolerance for male and female Islamic Studies teachers. Teachers are periodically dismissed or subjected to punitive action for failure to abide by government instructions to avoid inciting hatred against other religions.

As a result of the institution of the National Dialogues, the Saudi government launched the 'King Abdullah Project for the Development of Public Education' in February 2007.

This project approved a $2.4 billion, six-year project to transform the Kingdom's public education system. The effort, which has been ongoing since its launch, focuses on teacher training and development; curriculum development with an emphasis on critical thinking; improving the educational environment through technology (i.e., Smart Boards in classrooms); and extracurricular activities. In October 2016, the Ministry of Islamic Affairs launched a program identified as a "Shielding Campaign Against Terrorism." While previous efforts focused on dealing with a problem after it occurred, the current campaign aims at safeguarding youth against radical ideology by using every source available to the ministry, such as sermons and mosque activities and general education curricula and advocacy.

The ministry also has been working on issuing a series of books called the "Shielding Series." The department issued its first release, a work that includes the transcript of the meeting and the dialogue that took place between the late Interior Minister Prince Nayef bin Abdulaziz and Saudi imams and preachers. The dialogue provided a detailed outline of "how to address a radical ideology and deviant thinking."
CYBER-SECURITY, SOCIAL MEDIA AND THE INTERNET

The Saudis are the most active Twitter users in the Arab world, according to a 2014 report, with 4.8 million users producing 40 percent of all tweets in Arab countries. This unfortunately raises concerns in the Kingdom about the penetration of radicalized recruitment through social media and Internet-based communications.

In February 2013, the International Data Corporation (IDC) reported that Saudi Arabia invested the most of any country in the Middle East on technology, underscoring the growing importance with which the Kingdom sees cyber-security and countering extremism on the Internet. The Kingdom has tasked the Ministry of Defense to work with the private sector to defend the Kingdom against those threats.

While the Ministry of Defense works to develop the military aspect of cyber-security as it pertains to the protection of Saudi industry and border surveillance, the Ministry of Interior is focused on the internal and domestic dimension of monitoring extremist communications, applying cyber-security technologies to track radicalized messaging throughout Arab/Muslim social media and the Internet in general.

The Ministry of Interior has significantly developed its technological capabilities in recent years, particularly its computer network. Known as the "National Data Center," this network links the Ministry's centers throughout the Kingdom via terminals for entering and retrieving security, administrative and service data.

The main focus of this project involves investing in building it capacity to monitor online communications and intervene as necessary. To date, there 1,000 terminal systems in more than 250 centers for capturing and accessing this data.

Article 4 of the January 2014 Anti-terrorism Law prohibits support for banned groups "circulating their contents in any form, or using slogans of these groups and currents [of thought], or any symbols which point to support or sympathy with them through audio, visual, or written format, including websites and social media." On March 24, 2007, the Saudi government decreed, and the MOI put into practice, the Anti-Cyber Crime Law, which criminalizes the production and spread of materials online that damage “public order, religious values, [and] public morals.” This law establishes penalties for offenses such as hacking into websites and heavy penalties for anyone who assists a terrorist group build or operate a website, or who uses a website to disseminate information such as instructions on how to build an explosive device. In 2008, the Saudi government established the Specialized Criminal Court (SCC) to try terrorism-related cases. This includes those involving violations of the cyber-crime law, such as using social media to incite international organizations against the Kingdom or the founding unlicensed and/or prohibited organizations, online or otherwise.

There are two regulatory agencies concerned with Internet usage in the Kingdom: The Communications and Information Technology Commission (CITC) and the Internet Services Unit (ISU). Since 2006, the CITC has blocked access to thousands of websites with the aim of destroying the ability of extremist organizations to spread their message and reach potential recruits. The ISU is a department of the King Abdullah Center for Science and Technology (KACST) and registers all blocking requests for content deemed offensive and/or radicalizing.

According to Prince Abdulaziz bin Bandar bin Abdulaziz, the assistant to the head of the Saudi National Intelligence Agency (SNIA), there are nearly 17,000 extremist Internet sites carrying radical ideologies, with an annual increase of 9,000 websites that “move away from original Islam in order to legitimize violence.” Prince Muqrin bin Abdulaziz, the head of SNIA, has launched outreach to 14 Western website hosting companies to reduce the activities of more than 5,400 websites used by terrorist groups.

As terrorists traditionally have used the Internet for recruiting and training, the Saudi Council of Ministers approved on April 13, 2007 the Anti-Cybercrime Law. Article 7 (1) of the cyber-crime law imposes a maximum of ten years’ imprisonment and/or a maximum fine of $1.3 million for anyone who creates a website for a terrorist organization, promotes the organizations’ radicalism, or propagates information on how to make explosives. In March 2017, the SCC delivered a 27-year sentence to a Saudi found guilty of joining a terrorist group and sending content intended to undermine public order via the social platform WhatsApp. Part of the 27 year-sentence was based on Article 6 of the Anti-Cybercrime Law.
Saudi Arabia has flown 341 sorties against Daesh in Syria, the second largest number of sorties, after the United States.

An F-15 fighter in the Royal Saudi Air Force
Saudi Arabia is the main target of Daesh and other terror groups because it is the birthplace of Islam and home to the Two Holy Mosques. Saudi Arabia continues to expand and intensify its counterterrorism initiatives, as terrorism remains a major threat to the safety and security of our citizenry and the global community.

Saudi Arabia is one of the leading nations combating terrorism and terrorist financing, and has been working closely with its allies on all fronts. Saudi Arabia is hunting down the men, cutting off the money and destroying the mindset that Daesh and other terror organizations create and rely on.

On February 21, 2017, Foreign Minister Al-Jubeir told a German newspaper that the Kingdom was “ready to send ground troops” to fight Daesh in Syria. Minister Al-Jubeir noted that not only Saudi Arabia, but other Gulf nations were willing to send special forces troops as part as a U.S.-led coalition against Daesh. Since the rise of that terror group in 2014, all exercises and training of Saudi conventional and special forces have focused on countering and combatting non-state insurgents. Daesh and the emergence of similarly aligned militant Islamists pose the most immediate threat to the Kingdom. Daesh has carried out deadly attacks in the Kingdom and Abu Bakr Al-Baghdadi, Daesh’s leader, has declared his intention to destroy the Saudi state. In view of this, the Foreign Minister has said Saudi Arabia is ready to participate with the its own forces if the U.S.-led coalition against Daesh is prepared to engage in ground operations—a comment the Foreign Minister had first said in February 2016.

In 2014, Saudi Arabia condemned Daesh and Jabhat al-Nusra, the Syrian affiliate of Al-Qaeda. Hundreds of alleged Daesh supporters were arrested in 2015 and 2016. The fight has not been limited to military: In June 2016, Saudi Security Services announced the arrest of several terror suspects, among whom was an imam at the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina suspected of supporting Daesh. The Kingdom will not tolerate any religious figure or scholar who uses his position of authority to spread false beliefs and encourage violent actions that are a degradation of the spirit and meaning of Islam. However, it is the geopolitical threat of this terror group that is the most immediate, and to this end, the Kingdom has been working closely with its allied partners through two major military coalitions—one international and one specifically Muslim-nation based—to eradicate the territorial growth and logistical basis of Daesh.

International Cooperation

Saudi Arabia is a founding member of the Global Coalition to Counter Daesh, beginning airstrikes against Daesh targets in Syria in September 2014. As of March 2017, Saudi Arabia has flown 341 sorties against Daesh in Syria, the second largest number of sorties, after the United States.

In January 2017, Saudi Arabia hosted the general staff chiefs of fourteen countries of the Global Coalition Against Daesh. Representatives from Saudi Arabia, U.S., Jordan, UAE, Bahrain, Turkey, Tunisia, Oman, Qatar, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malaysia, Morocco and Nigeria discussed their approaches to enhance the efforts of the coalition to paralyze and destroy Daesh capabilities.

On March 22, 2017, Saudi Foreign Minister Adel bin Ahmed bin Al-Jubeir and foreign ministers of the other Global Coalition member nations met in Washington at the invitation of U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to review and accelerate the campaign for the lasting defeat of Daesh.

The Islamic Military Alliance to Fight Terrorism

On December 15, 2015, Saudi Arabia announced the formation of the Islamic Military Alliance to Fight Terrorism. At the time of the Alliance’s original organization, the Kingdom announced that the initial group of 34 states had “decided on the formation of a military alliance led by Saudi Arabia to fight terrorism, coordinate military efforts, exchange information, and train Alliance personnel through a joint operations center based in Riyadh to coordinate and support military operations.” This Alliance has been subsequently grown to 41 nations.
The “North Thunder” military drill was launched in northern Saudi Arabia on February 28, 2016 with the participation of forces representing the Kingdom, the United Arab Emirates, Jordan, Bahrain, Senegal, Sudan, Kuwait, Maldives, Morocco, Pakistan, Chad, Turkey, Tunisia, Comoros, Djibouti, Oman, Qatar, Malaysia, Egypt and Mauritania, in addition to the GCC’s Peninsula Shield Forces. “North Thunder” received regional and international attention as the largest ever military drill in the Middle East in terms of the number of participating forces.

On March 27, 2016, the Chiefs of Staff of the armed forces of the Alliance member countries issued the Riyadh Declaration, a final statement of their joint commitment to fight terrorism.

The Peninsula Shield Force

The Peninsula Shield Force is the military side of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) for the Arab States of the Gulf region and is intended to deter and respond to military aggression against any of the GCC member countries: Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

The Shield Force recently expanded its mandate to combat the emergence of Daesh, alongside its regular activity of monitoring and containing: instability in the Mideast region, regional neighbors’ ambitions for nuclear weapons, political instability in Iraq, and the upheaval in Syria. These factors have given the GCC clear incentives to strengthen its collective defense and security systems.

The Royal Saudi Air Force (RSAF)

The Royal Saudi Air Force is the centerpiece of the Kingdom’s defense structure and has been highly effective in combating Daesh in Syria, such as during airstrikes with U.S. coalition forces in early February 2016. Saudi fighter aircraft have carried out 341 strikes against Daesh targets in Syria since the beginning of the international campaign against Daesh. These attacks included the destruction of or damage to Daesh fighters, training bases, compounds, headquarters, command and control facilities, a finance center, supply trucks and armed vehicles.
In 2016, Saudi authorities foiled multiple terrorist plots targeting mosques, sporting events, tourist attractions and the U.S. Consulate in Jeddah.

Domestic Terror Attacks: 2015-2017

2017
On January 21, two extremists blew themselves up after security forces cornered them in the Harazat area of Jeddah.

On January 7, two terrorists were killed by police in the Al-Yasmin suburb of Riyadh. The two men were named as Tayeh Salem bin Yaslam Al-Sayari, an Daesh "suicide bomb" expert, wanted for previous acts of terrorism, and Talal bin Samran Al-Saedi.

2016
On August 18, an exchange of gunfire occurred in Qatif, resulting in the death of one person.

On August 15, an exchange of gunfire in Qatif resulted in the death of one person.

On July 4, 2016, four suicide bombs exploded in three locations in Saudi Arabia. One of them exploded in the parking lot of the Nabawi Mosque (the Prophet’s Mosque in Medina). The second and third suicide bombers targeted a mosque in Qatif, but they failed to harm anyone but themselves. A fourth militant blew himself up in Jeddah.
On June 27, an exchange of gunfire in the eastern city of Qatif resulted in the death of one person.

On April 30, an explosive device detonated in Al-Ahsa.

On April 16, an exchange of gunfire occurred in Qatif.

On April 6, shootings took place in the city of Riyadh, resulting in the death of one person.

On April 4, a detonation of an explosive device in Al-Kharj resulted in the death of one person.

On February 27, an exchange of gunfire in Qassim resulted in the death of one person.

On February 8, a car bomb exploded in Riyadh without causing injuries. Daesh claimed responsibility.

On January 29, a suicide bombing in the Ridha mosque in Al-Ahsa, in the eastern region of the country, resulted in the deaths of four people, including two security personnel, and the injury of 18 individuals.

On January 5, four armed men set fire to a Saudi Aramco bus in the city of Qatif.

On October 26, a suicide bomber murdered two people and wounded 26 in a mosque in the southern city of Najran. The bomber, a Saudi national who recently returned from fighting for Daesh in Syria, was blocked from entering the center of the mosque by a 95-year-old man, which limited the death toll.

On September 4, at the Aramco Abqaiq Community, Sgt. Ali Al-Habeeb was killed during a confrontation with a terrorist attacker. Saudi security forces pursued and killed the attacker, who was reported to have been wearing an explosives-laden belt.
On August 6, the Abha Mosque bombing was carried out by a suicide bomber, killing 17 people at a mosque in the south-western Saudi city of Abha. The mosque was inside a military installation controlled by Saudi Special Forces engaged in the war in nearby Yemen.

On July 29, a policeman was killed in a drive-by shooting in the village on Al-Jish in Qatif Province.

On July 16, a suicide attacker detonated his car bomb at a police checkpoint near a prison in Riyadh, killing himself and injuring two others.

On July 3, a policeman was killed during a counter-terror operation Taif, in the southwestern province of the country.

On May 29, a suicide bomber attacked a mosque in Dammam, killing 4 people and injuring 4 others.

On May 22, a suicide bomber attacked the Imam Ali mosque in the village of Al-Qadeeh, in Qatif governorate, during Friday prayers. The Saudi health minister told state television that at least 21 people had been killed and more than 80 injured in the blast. Daesh later claimed responsibility for the attack.

On January 5, a pair of suicide bombers attacked a border patrol unit near Arar, killing three border officers.

Saudi general: My country supports America's tough stance against ISIS, terror and Iran

Major General Ahmed Hassan Mohammad Asseri
Adviser to Saudi Arabia’s Defense Minister

FOX NEWS | MARCH 26, 2017

Leaders from 68 countries gathered in Washington for a meeting of the Global Coalition to Counter Daesh (ISIL) hosted by President Trump's administration this past week.

Saudi Arabia welcomes the new administration's attention to the Middle East and its support for America's friends who are fighting back against transnational terrorists such as Daesh and pushing back against Iranian interference in countries such as Yemen.

As Americans would say, “You've got our back.” And America's support is indispensable as we stand together against a host of threats to regional stability.

While meeting with Saudi Deputy Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman – an architect of our country’s economic, social, and governmental reforms – at the White House recently, President Trump enthusiastically endorsed the modernization drive that will make our country an even more valuable strategic partner. Similarly, our government welcomes the United States' long-standing support of the Saudi defense forces.
The new administration is also tough minded about the Iranian threat to regional stability, which was magnified by the recent nuclear deal between Iran and six world powers, including the United States.

Defense Secretary James Mattis and CIA Director Mike Pompeo each describe Iran as the world's largest state sponsor of terrorism, while Vice President Mike Pence has called the nuclear agreement "a terrible deal."

Saudi Arabia is prepared to work with the United States and its allies to restrain Iranian conduct, just as we have helped to stabilize the Arabian Gulf and its energy supplies since World War II. While the U.S.-Saudi partnership is time-tested, reaffirming this relationship is a matter of strategy, not sentiment. Since the Global Coalition's founding three years ago, Saudi Arabia has been an active partner from Day One, including sending fighter jets to the Incirlik airbase in southern Turkey to join the US-led air campaign against Daesh in Syria.

On the financial front, Saudi Arabia works closely with the United States to cut off funding for Daesh and Al Qaeda. Through real-time information-sharing, we cooperate with the United States to shut down the flow of funds from western banks to Middle Eastern extremists.

To ensure that charitable contributions don't subsidize terrorism, we prohibit Saudi mosques and aid organizations from transferring money outside our country.

We have also taken strong steps to stop unauthorized shipments of military equipment from leaving Saudi Arabia and to prevent people from crossing our borders to join Daesh in Iraq or Syria.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabia is mobilizing the Muslim world against the extremist threat to our religion. Under Saudi leadership, the 41-nation Islamic Coalition is equipping our countries to fight violent extremists by training our security forces and sharing information and intelligence.

Last March, in the largest joint military exercise ever in the Middle East, some 350,000 soldiers, 20,000 tanks and 2,500 warplanes from 20 countries joined together in "war games" in the Saudi desert to jointly train our security forces for operations against non-state armed groups.
Turning from the battlefields to the battle of ideas, the Islamic Coalition is encouraging educators and scholars as well as religious and political leaders to raise their voices against those who preach violence. Moreover, Saudi Arabia has created a center which operates 24/7 to analyze social media to identify and track terrorist efforts to recruit and activate new followers.

But non-state armed groups and radical preachers aren’t the only threats. By conducting ballistic missile tests last month and meddling in Yemen, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, the Sinai Peninsula and even the Gulf States, Iran is imperiling the stability of our region. Even more disturbingly, Iran is sharing ballistic missile technology with the extremist Houthi militia in Yemen and similar groups in other countries, thereby imperiling the security of the entire region.

In Yemen, which shares a 1,100-mile border with Saudi Arabia, Iran is supporting and arming the Houthi militia, modeled on the terrorist Hezbollah movement that has destabilized Lebanon. While making Yemen ungovernable, the Houthis are attacking Saudi Arabia, having fired more than 40,000 mortars, rockets and other projectiles at our towns, killing at least 375 civilians, closing more than 500 schools and displacing 24 villages and over 17,000 people.

In January, three Houthi suicide boats rammed a Saudi frigate off the western coast, killing two crew members and injuring three others.

Responding to this threat, Saudi Arabia leads a coalition of 12 countries fighting to reinstate Yemen’s legitimate, internationally recognized government and restore peace and security to the country.

To be sure, Saudi Arabia prefers to promote stability through peaceful means, as we do by providing much-needed diplomatic and economic support to strategic allies such as Egypt and Jordan. But aggression, active destabilization and acts of terrorism, including Iran’s infringements in Yemen, demand a military response.

From the Cold War through the War on Terror, the U.S. has helped Saudi Arabia strengthen our defenses through joint military training exercise and ballistic defensive weapons sales, making our country the largest customer of U.S. military equipment.
Today, we’re working with the United States and its allies to defeat Daesh, Al Qaeda and Iranian-sponsored extremism and expansionism.

We stand shoulder-to-shoulder for a secure and stable Middle East in a peaceful and prosperous world.
The Saudis are Fighting Terrorism, Don’t Believe Otherwise

Saudi Foreign Minister Adel bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir

Those who accuse Saudi Arabia of supporting violent extremism not only fail to acknowledge the Kingdom’s leadership in combating terrorism around the world but also do not see that it is illogical and irrational for Saudi Arabia to be anything less than at the forefront of nations combatting this scourge.

Multiple actors—each with their own motives—have targeted the Kingdom, seeking to destabilize the country and terrorize the Saudi people. So it is in our national interest to defeat terrorism—and a national priority.

Whether non-state actors like Al-Qaeda or the Islamic State militant group (ISIS), or state-sponsored extremism from Iran and its proxies, Saudi Arabia has, as much as any other country, a national security incentive to stop the men, the money and the mindset that foments terrorism and violent extremism.

Some try to malign Saudi Arabia by reciting that “15 of the 19” 9/11 hijackers were Saudi. They should know that the mastermind of the 9/11 attacks, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, told U.S. interrogators that the initial plan was to have 20 hijackers from different nationalities, but late in the planning Osama bin Laden directed him to use as many Saudis as possible to give the attack a Saudi face.

This was likely designed to drive a wedge between the Kingdom and the U.S. If this was Osama bin Laden's plan, it almost succeeded, as we saw from the wave of criticism the Kingdom experienced after 9/11.

Al-Qaeda
In 2003, the Saudi capital was targeted with simultaneous suicide bombings at three residential compounds. These bombings killed more than 30 persons, including Saudis, Lebanese, Americans, British and Australians. Other attacks followed, seeking to destabilize the Kingdom and shake the confidence of expatriates to cause them to leave. It did not succeed. Faris al-Zahrani, a top Al-Qaeda strategist whose death sentence was recently carried out, along with other convicted terrorists, masterminded a 2004 attack on the U.S. Consulate in Jeddah, killing four security guards and five staff members.

ISIS

The murderers of ISIS have publicly proclaimed the taking of the Saudi state as one of their goals. Throughout 2015, ISIS militants struck four mosques in Dammam, Qatif, Abha and Najran, killing 38 and wounding 148. In August 2015, Saudi authorities arrested 421 suspects from four different extremist cells in connection with these crimes. Another 15 suspects were arrested while planning a suicide operation against the U.S. Embassy in Riyadh using a truck loaded with explosives. ISIS operatives in Saudi Arabia have been caught trying to free terrorists from prison, recruit young people to their cause and spread ISIS propaganda.

Iran

Iran has used terrorism as an instrument of its foreign policy since the 1979 Revolution. Saudi Arabia has long been a target of terrorism perpetrated by Iranian proxies. In 1987, the Iranian sponsored Hezbollah al-Hejaz set fire to an oil facility in Ras Tanura in eastern Saudi Arabia. That same year, Saudi authorities foiled a plot by Iranian pilgrims to smuggle explosives into the kingdom. In 1988, Hezbollah al-Hejaz attacked a petrochemical company facility in Jubail. Most despicable was Iran's involvement in the 1996 Khobar bombings, which resulted in the deaths of 120 people, including 19 Americans.

Faced with such diverse and dangerous adversaries, Saudi Arabia has spared no effort or expense to combat terrorism. The Kingdom is committed to uprooting extremism at the source and draining militant groups of resources.

Saudi Arabia has arrested extremists within its borders, tried them before specialized courts and imposed the ultimate penalties on those convicted. The Kingdom has implemented one of the world's strictest financial control systems to combat terrorism financing.
Donations in mosques and public places are prohibited, and Saudi charities are prohibited from transferring money outside the country to ensure that charitable funds do not find their way to violent extremists.

In 2005, the Kingdom launched a national public awareness campaign against extremism that is still ongoing to counter the extremist narrative and educate our public about the dangers of violent extremism. In 2008, it launched a global interfaith dialogue to promote harmony among the world’s religions and cultures. A global center was established in Vienna to continue this effort.

In addition to actions, Saudi Arabia has worked with other nations to combat terrorism—both diplomatically and militarily. Through a $110 million grant, Saudi Arabia helped establish the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Center to combat terrorism, address the mindset of extremism that foments terrorism and build the capacity of UN member states to fight against terrorism.

Saudi Arabia has established “fusion cells” where law enforcement and intelligence officials from Saudi Arabia, the United States and other partners work closely together to investigate and interdict terrorism plots and finances.

Saudi Air Force planes were one of the first to fly sorties over Syria as part of the military actions against ISIS, and Saudi Arabia is leading a coalition of 38 Islamic countries to fight terrorism and extremism.

Terrorism is a global scourge. Many countries have known the grief and pain it causes. It makes no sense for Saudi Arabia to support or condone those who have as their goal the destruction of Saudi Arabia. It is against our values, our faith and our national character.

That is why the Kingdom has responded with strength, persistence and resolve. To accuse the Kingdom of being lax, much less complicit, when it comes to combatting terrorism and its financing is not only irresponsible but also flies against the face of reality.
Saudi Arabia does not support Islamic State terrorists – or any others

Mohammed bin Nawaf Al-Saud, Ambassador of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to the UK

the guardian | AUGUST 17, 2014

Richard Norton-Taylor suggests that Saudi Arabia has been “funding the most intolerant brand of Islam” in his blog (UK weapons trump human rights in Israel and Saudi Arabia, August 11, 2014).

He suggests this is "Wahhabi absolutism." Hearsay and a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. He supports his argument with information gleaned from the column of a fellow journalist from another newspaper.

As stated, Wahhabism is not a sect of Islam. What is being referred to is the interpretation of Muhammad Abd al-Wahhab, who saw his fellow Muslims being diverted from the path of Islam as it had been delivered by the prophet Muhammad (PBUH). Saudis do not accept to be labelled "Wahhabis". We are Muslims. In 2011, HRH Prince Salman bin Abdulaziz (now the crown prince) said: "Some people use the word Wahhabism to describe the message of Muhammad Ibn Abd al-Wahhab in order to isolate Saudi Muslims from the rest of the Muslim world."

This word is a convenient label dreamed up by some governments, political analysts and the media to describe the major “Islamic threat” facing western civilization. It is described as extremist and radical, accused of inspiring movements ranging from the Taliban in Afghanistan to the al-Qaida network and now Daesh in Iraq. This was likely designed to drive a wedge between the kingdom and the U.S. If this was Osama bin Laden’s plan, it almost succeeded, as we saw from the wave of criticism the kingdom experienced after 9/11.

But this view does not even faintly correspond with the teachings of Muhammad Ibn Abd al Wahhab, who was a well-travelled, learned, scholarly jurist of the 18th century. He insisted on adherence to Qur’anic values and the teachings of the prophet Muhammad (PBUH) which includes the maximum preservation of human life, even in the midst of jihad. He taught tolerance and supported the rights of both men and women.

Let me make it perfectly clear. The government of Saudi Arabia does not support or fund the murderers who have collected under the banner of the Islamic State. Their ideology is not one that Saudi Arabia recognizes, or that would be recognized by the vast majority of Muslims around the world – whether Sunni or Shia.

Under the leadership of the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques, King Abdullah, Saudi Arabia launched an initiative for dialogue between all religions and cultures in 2008 with the establishment of the King Abdullah Bin Abdulaziz International Centre for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue in Vienna.

Following an international counterterrorism conference held in Riyadh in 2005, the UN counterterrorism center was established with financial support from Saudi Arabia. The Kingdom has been and will continue to fight extremism within the nation’s own borders daily, indeed hourly.

Firm action is taken against any imam who is found to hold extremist views and who tries to incite their followers to violence. Saudi Arabia has passed laws and warned its citizens that they will be arrested and prosecuted if they attempt to join Daesh or any other international terrorist group, or to take part in any of the conflicts raging in any region. Saudi Arabia has done and will do everything it can to stop the spread of this corrosive poison in the country and region and encourage all other governments to do the same.
Don’t Blame ‘Wahhabism’ for Terrorism

Mohammed Alyahya, Nonresident Fellow, Atlantic Council

The word “Wahhabism” has become a boogeyman in the West, deemed responsible for the radicalization of Muslims around the world. And since Wahhabism is a strain of Islam that has its origins in the Arabian Peninsula and is the dominant religious doctrine of Saudi Arabia that country is often viewed as the prime culprit in the propagation of violent extremism.

But blaming Wahhabism and Saudi Arabia for Islamist radicalism is a dangerous red herring.

This single-cause explanation distracts from the complex political, economic and psychological reasons people join terrorist groups. In doing so, it impedes Saudi Arabia’s ability to effectively fight terrorism.

Wahhabism is, in fact, a loaded, anti-Saudi synonym for Salafism, a puritanical strain of Islam that encourages emulating the “salaf,” or predecessors, the first followers of the Prophet Muhammad. Salafism has historically been apolitical and the overwhelming majority of Salafis are not violent.

Most Islamist militants have nothing to do with Saudi Wahhabism. The Taliban for example, are Deobandis, a revivalist, anti-imperialist strain of Islam that emerged as a reaction to British colonialism in South Asia. Most members of Al Qaeda follow a radical current that emerged from the Muslim Brotherhood, a movement that defined itself largely in relation and opposition to the West.
and its values. While some terrorists do identify as Salafi, Islamic sects that are ideologically opposed to Salafism — Naqshbandi Sufis and Shiites, among others — have engaged in violent jihad in Iraq, Afghanistan and Syria.

And yet much of the Western news media and far too many pundits put forward a different picture entirely, pinning the blame for terrorism on Wahhabi ideology emanating from Saudi Arabia. These arguments lead one to imagine that European terrorists end up joining the Islamic State by wandering the streets of Paris or Brussels and stumbling upon a Saudi-funded mosque. In this mosque, they read a single book, “The Book of Monotheism,” by Muhammad ibn Abdul-Wahhab, the 18th-century sheikh who founded Wahhabism. A week later, the book’s fundamentalist message inspires them to travel to Syria’s front lines or to plot terrorist attacks in Europe.

The reality is much more complex. Most of the perpetrators of terrorist attacks in Europe have been petty criminals who were known to drink alcohol and take drugs. Their radicalization has little to do with theology. Some European Muslims reportedly purchased books like “Islam for Dummies” before embarking on journeys to take part in jihad in Syria. What they all have in common is a belief that the Muslim world and the West are locked in an irreconcilable clash of civilizations.

It is similarly inaccurate to condemn Wahhabism or Saudi Salafism for the jihadist groups that have emerged in the Arab world in recent years. Tunisians account for the largest foreign population in the Islamic State. The group’s top ranks emerged from Iraq. Syria, of course, is a hotbed of jihadists of all stripes. And yet, these countries until recently were ruled by secular dictators, who banned Saudi missionary activities and, in the case of Iraq and Syria, viewed Saudi Arabia as an adversary.

On the other hand, Saudi Arabia has been engaged in missionary activities in India, building mosques, schools and social service centers. And yet barely any jihadists have emerged from among India’s population of more than 170 million Muslims.
The revival of a politicized form of radical Islam, which has been taking place in the Arab world since the 1970s, is not driven just by ideology, but by the failure of Arab governments to meet the expectations of their own populations and the brutal reprisals they have employed to quell demands for better, more transparent governance. Like the social and psychological alienation that drives some European Muslims to join extremist groups, this root cause must be addressed in order to truly fight terrorism. There is no doubt that while certain strains of Salafism are intolerant, intolerance does not necessarily lead to terrorism. Ideological intolerance is a problem in its own right, one that carries risks and dangers and requires its own treatments. But conflating its dangers with the causes of violent extremism can diminish the effectiveness of serious counterterrorism efforts.

It is Saudi Arabia — the country accused of promoting ideas that lead to violent extremism — that has effectively harnessed religion to fight radicalism. Saudi Arabia has fought Al-Qaeda not only operationally, but also by countering its ideology with religious arguments. Scholars have mobilized to condemn both terrorist acts and rhetoric. Salafi scholars have been instrumental in the success of the rehabilitation programs for those convicted of aiding and abetting terrorism.

In the 1990s, Saudi Arabia’s grand mufti, Abdul Aziz ibn Baz, issued a fatwa condemning suicide operations. The current grand mufti, Abdul Aziz bin Abdullah al-Sheikh, is also on record advocating against Saudis’ joining groups fighting overseas and, in keeping with traditional Salafi teachings, has called on all Muslims to remain obedient to the legitimate leader’s dictates and avoid any form of organized political activism.

Blaming Wahhabism or Salafism for violent radicalism is not merely an intellectual slip or an injustice to Salafis, it is a distortion that stands to obstruct fighting violent radicalism and understanding its causes. Any religious ideology adopted by radicals is often a mask for other issues. Blaming or even destroying an ideology like Salafism will not end radicalism.
