

1. What is the Administration's policy here? The President called Haftar and many say it was a catalyst for Haftar's attack. And since then we have permitted weapons to flow to him which is problematic?
2. What is the Administration doing to stop the proxy support to the unrecognized warlord Haftar who, by public reports, is receiving weapons and manpower from a number of countries in violation of the UN arms embargo?
3. Is the Administration concerned that Libya seems to be headed towards a failed state? Oil production has ceased, Russia and others are supporting a violent opposition to the recognized government, and an environment for renewed ISIS influence is being created.
4. What should be the U.S. role in Libya? Especially with Russia's expanding military support, including manpower by using Russian mercenaries? Is it in the U.S.'s interest to allow Russia and other countries to support an attack on the U.S. and UN-recognized government?
5. Under UN leadership the violence in Libya has unfortunately only increased with significant loss of life and no stability in the country. I am informed that a move to a democratic elections was imminent but was prevented by Haftar's attack. I am also informed that proxies, now on both sides, but initially supporting Haftar have made the situation worse. What is the Administration doing to stop proxies in order for Libyans to have a real chance for resolution? This instability only creates an environment for ISIS and others which is not in the U.S.'s interest.
6. Is the Administration concerned that if Haftar succeeds, Russia will gain access to two more deep water ports in Libya facing Europe, besides the one they now have in Syria?
7. I am informed that there are two lawsuits outstanding against Haftar, and another one will be announced soon, all focused on war criminal allegations. Why does the Administration seem to support this type individual?
