ICYMI: Macedonia Prime Minister: We Must Work Together to Help the Migrants

Skopje, Republic of Macedonia – This week, in a new Newsweek op-ed, the Republic of Macedonia Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski called for a coordinated international response to the ongoing refugee crisis.

The full op-ed, entitled, “We Must Work Together to Help the Migrants,” is available online here and also follows below:

The terror attacks in Paris and the arrival of winter have changed the nature of how Europe must respond to its ongoing refugee crisis.

To meet the dual security and humanitarian challenges, we must develop and implement a more coordinated approach that unites fellow nations on the refugee path, the European Union, international partners such as the United States and global and local NGOs.

As a land-locked nation in the major refugee transit path, the Republic of Macedonia faces a unique challenge. Unlike other countries in the center of the refugee crisis, Macedonia is a non-European Union nation that receives thousands of refugees each day directly from Greece, an E.U. nation that is blocking our membership to NATO and, since 2009, has prevented us from opening membership negotiations with the E.U.

Despite the limited resources of our nation of two million, we have ensured the safe passage of over 600,000 refugees who have transited through our country thus far this year—helping to advance, support and protect the European Union’s as well as NATO’s security priorities in the process.

The refugee flow is not going away. In fact, projections show that the volume is likely to grow in the years ahead. To address both security and humanitarian concerns now and in the future, we propose a new vision for responding to the refugee crisis. The approach adheres to key directives established by the E.U. while proposing a new set of ideas for cooperation in the Balkans.

To that end, we have invited the countries on the refugee route—such as Serbia, Croatia, Slovenia, Austria, Hungary, Czech Republic, Slovakia and Poland—to deploy border personnel on our southern border with Greece in order to achieve greater accountability and coordination that fails to exist today.

We want this cooperation on the border to lead to the establishment of a new Balkan Center to help monitor and respond to the needs of the refugee flow and to provide a new regional nexus for information gathering and intelligence sharing.

We are also establishing a European Humanitarian Corridor for refugee transit to create a more safe and orderly process to guide the flow of refugees through Europe. To shore up security shortcomings at the refugees' point of E.U. entry, we are deploying new technology along the Greek/Macedonian border to capture biographical and biometric information.

Any effort to safely channel refugees along a transit route must include new fencing infrastructure to ensure a streamlined and accountable flow of both people and information. In accordance with broader, European-wide directives, our priority as a nation and a region must remain on providing safe transit for refugees fleeing from war who have a final destination in Europe.

As a small country we are not able to jeopardize our ability to provide for these refugees by admitting economic migrants with no final destination in countries to our north. We are actively asking partners to help us communicate to non-refugee migrants that we cannot secure their transit north, as our resources are already stretched thin in providing for the humanitarian needs of the refugees transiting through our borders.

Addressing the ongoing refugee crisis follows on the heels of economic upheaval in our region that has similarly required a broader European-wide and international focus and response. Macedonia has remained stable economically in comparison to some of our neighbors—in fact, the World Bank recently ranked our nation as 12th among 189 countries in its annual ranking of nations on the ease of doing business, including 2nd internationally in the ease of starting a business.

We have a track record of working with international partners and attracting multinational companies by implementing free trade agreements, creating a marketplace with the lowest taxes and lowest cost of doing business in Europe, and offering a high skilled workforce.

Though we have emerged resilient economically, the financial crisis reminded us of a larger truth: our region remains at the epicenter of fundamental economic, humanitarian and security challenges now and for the foreseeable future. And what happens in the Balkans has continent-wide and international ramifications that are essential to address.

Once again, we must come together around a coordinated response to a pressing crisis by uniting Balkan countries, European allies, international actors and NGO and relief organizations around a shared and sustainable vision.

An attack on the free media is an attack on us all
By Michael P. Meehan

In the U.S., we often take our freedoms for granted. Our open access to news and information is guaranteed by our Constitution and is one of the most important pillars of our democracy.

However, not everyone is able to enjoy the same freedoms we have at home. For example, in Russia, President Vladimir Putin has gone to great lengths to consolidate the country's media, "moving from supporting the government with biased news to actively participating in an 'information war' with its perceived adversaries," according to a Freedom House report. And in China, reporters have faced long-term imprisonment for publishing "political liberal commentary," according to the same investigation.

While many might expect this type of media suppression from countries governed by heavy-handed regimes, what's unexpected—and rather disturbing—is what's happening in pro-western nations. Macedonia, for example, is a former Soviet bloc country headed by pro-NATO and pro-Western Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski. Macedonia is also a candidate for accession to the European Union. However, the country's domestic opposition party, SDSM, is led by Zoran Zaev, the successor to the former ruling communist party during the Cold War. Earlier this week, Zaev declared that four of the seven largest TV stations and daily newspapers—all free media not owned by the SDSM—are his "greatest political enemies." After facing a wall of criticism, Zaev's party doubled-down, issuing a statement that called the current Macedonian free media environment "catastrophic."

Zaev's comments harken back to dark time in recent Macedonian history. Earlier this summer, journalists from Sitel TV and the chief editor of the "Vecer" newspaper were verbally and physically assaulted by members of the SDSM party while covering a protest at the Macedonian assembly. The offices of "Radio Free Macedonia" were also destroyed during the same protest.

As Macedonia deals with the ongoing refugee crisis, the need for free and independent journalism is more important now than ever. The harrowing stories of refugees and families fleeing extreme violence have already played a significant role in shaping both public perceptions and the international community's response. For example, the traumatic photo of three-year-old Aylan Kurdi captured hearts and minds across the world, spurring many countries and ordinary citizens to take action.

For the first half of this decade, I served as a board member of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and as chair of the Strategy and Budget Committee of the Broadcasting Board of Governors, overseeing all U.S. international non-military media, including the Voice of America. I saw first hand the amazing role that a free media plays in emerging democracies and sadly how some governments, threatened, intimidate and jail journalists on a daily basis. A free media is the foundation for a free society.

Every day, journalists from around the world go to great lengths and too many times at great risks, to deliver our daily news. Whether in a warzone or at a news desk, these courageous reporters face threats on a regular basis yet remain unwavering in their commitment to their jobs and the broader public. We must preserve their rights to report independently, so that we can continue to foster an environment of responsible discussion and open debate.

By suppressing free, independent journalism, we not only restrict the rights of ordinary citizens to access important information, but we undermine our own democratic values. By attacking the media, it is an attack on reporters and an attack on us all.

Meehan is the former chair of the Strategy and Budget and Global Internet Freedom Committees for the Broadcasting Board of Governors (BBG). He currently serves as the president and CEO of Squared Communications.

Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia Shares His Vision for Addressing the European Refugee Crisis

Excerpts from the Prime Minister's Speech Celebrating the Day of St. Clement of Ohrid

MACEDONIA – Speaking yesterday as part of a national holiday to celebrate St. Clement of Ohrid, the founder of the Cyrillic alphabet, Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia shared his vision for a coordinated approach to the ongoing European refugee crisis to address both security and humanitarian challenges.

As a land-locked nation in the major refugee transit path, the Republic of Macedonia faces a unique challenge. Unlike other countries in the center of the refugee crisis, Macedonia is a non-European Union nation who receives thousands of refugees each day directly from an E.U. nation. Despite confronting the refugee crisis without the direct operational or financial support afforded to E.U. member countries, the Republic of Macedonia has ensured the safe passage of more 600,000 refugees who have transited through the nation this year.

Yesterday, Prime Minister Gruevski shared his vision of the way forward in addressing this ongoing crisis. Below, we excerpt key portions of yesterday's speech:

"The Republic of Macedonia has the right, obligation and duty to take care and to protect our national interests and the interests of the citizens. This is our priority and this is our task. At the same time we feel for the pain and suffering of those who had to abandon their homes because of the war and to become refugees. We have had these examples among the Macedonians, and not so long ago.

...Therefore, we must act in coordination with the other countries. The coordination and mutual assistance are fundamental. Macedonia is the only country which is not an EU member-state and yet it accepts refugees from an EU member-state. Recently, EU has been asking for a distinction to be made between refugees and economic migrants. We are constantly appealing for an adoption of a Joint European Policy regarding this issue. Macedonia is ready to safeguard the European interests, to assist and to make what other countries fail to do. The politics of Macedonia is clear - through the European Humanitarian Corridor which was established we are ready to provide humane treatment and speedy transit for all refugees whose final destination is some of the European countries. We are asking the European partners to explain the economic migrants who have no European country as a final destination on their mind that our resources are small and limited and fully directed at the refugees coming from the war zōnes, all in order, as I said to provide humane treatment and a speedy transit through Macedonia.

The decision to put up a fence on our southern national border was adopted as a result of the risk assessment performed by experts and is part of the conclusions adopted by the Security Council. Its fundamental objective is not to impede, but to direct and channel the refugee inflow towards the check-points in order to register and to receive more humane treatment. Our border is open and all those refugees coming from war zones can enter – the same categories of people who are allowed entrance in the EU member-states. This act is in accordance with all standards and I would like to congratulate the Army of the Republic of Macedonia for their work which is in the interest of all citizens. I would like to acknowledge the Macedonian police which with their appropriate and proportionate activity resist all risks and security threats and perform their task on the southern border in a highly professional manner.

Our behaviour is in the interest of the migrants, for a better and more humane treatment, but also for registration, decrease and prevention of security threats and risks, not only towards Macedonia, but also towards our European friends. The activities on the southern Macedonian border are in the interest of Europe. The security is an important element and cannot be and must not be a secondary issue on the account of the humanity. These two things cannot be mutually exclusive, but must go hand in hand, recognizing each other's importance.

We have proven our humanity on numerous occasions – Macedonia was the place where 360,000 persons found a temporary shelter 16 years ago, during the Kosovo crisis and no one can blame Macedonia to be inhumane, on the contrary. With the winter on our doorstep, we are acting responsibly by providing free medical protection, warm clothes, food and warm beverages, we are training the staff which is ready to assist, we have cooperation with the NGOs and the establishment of SOS children's villages on both the south and north border are an excellent example of this. I am welcoming the decision adopted by EU for FRONTEX to take participation in the coordination of the activities on the Greek-Macedonian border and I want to extend my appreciation to the European politicians and European countries that provide their support in overcoming this challenge.

Once more we will need to stand united around a coordinated response to the crisis which will last; uniting the Balkan countries, the European allies, the international actors, the NGOs and humanitarian organizations around a shared and sustainable resolution of this crisis in which Macedonia, with its own resources, and without any serious financial assistance from outside, is undertaking its utmost efforts for humane treatment of those who are running away from the whirl of the war.

We will continue to behave responsibly and with commitment regarding this issue..."

Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia to Host Donald Tusk, President of the European Council on Sunday

Meeting to Discuss Prime Minister Gruevski's Goal and Vision of a Coordinated Response to Refugee Crisis

Skopje, Macedonia – Earlier this week, Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia called on neighboring countries, the European Union, and international partners to work with the Republic of Macedonia to develop and implement a coordinated approach to the ongoing refugee crisis. Prime Minister Gruevski noted that the attacks in Paris and the coming winter months make clear the need for a more coordinated and continent-wide plan that both strengthens security and addresses critical humanitarian needs.

To further that goal, Prime Minister Gruevski will host Donald Tusk, President of the European Council, for a meeting on Sunday, November 22nd. The meeting will be held in the Capitol at 15:00 CET. Prime Minister Gruevski's meeting with President Tusk follows a series of recent meetings between Prime Minister Gruevski and the heads of neighboring countries.

According to Prime Minister Gruevski, "Every nation affected by the refugee crisis will make its own set of related decisions about what is best for their country and citizens. However, we know that this is a European-wide challenge that, ultimately, will require a more coordinated and European-wide engagement. The countries in the Balkan region are managing this refugee situation and need additional support and better coordination with other countries, making this an urgent and critical political issue. Despite limited resources, we have risen to this challenge in a swift and humanitarian manner. The status quo is untenable and short-term recommendations do nothing to solve the problem. Macedonia knows that the only solution is European-wide expanded cooperation, real-time exchange of information and additional support so that we may ensure appropriate security and humanitarian outcomes for all involved."

The geography of the Republic of Macedonia presents the nation with a unique challenge. Unlike any other country in the center of this refugee crisis, the Republic of Macedonia is a non-European Union nation who receives thousands of refugees each day directly from an E.U. nation. Over the past 10 months, the nation of approximately 2 million citizens has prioritized the human rights and dignity of more than 520,000 refugees transiting through the nation.

Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia:
"Work with Us" to Develop and Implement a Coordinated Approach to the Refugee Crisis

The following is a statement from Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski of the Republic of Macedonia:

"The Republic of Macedonia calls on its neighbors, the European Union, and international partners to work with us to develop and implement a coordinated approach to the refugee crisis that both bolsters security and ensures needed humanitarian protections.

The ongoing refugee crisis and our nation's geography present the Republic of Macedonia with a unique challenge. Unlike any other country in the center of this refugee crisis, the Republic of Macedonia is a non-European Union nation who receives thousands of refugees each day directly from an E.U. nation. Geography has laid this issue at our doorstep and we are proud to ensure refugees safe passage through our nation's northern border and toward final destinations in other European Union nations. With the flow of refugees through our borders growing from 600 to now more than 7,000 a day, our nation of approximately 2 million citizens has prioritized the human rights and dignity of more than 520,000 refugees transiting through our nation over the past 10 months.

However, after the attacks in Paris and ahead of the coming winter months, it is more critical than ever to develop and implement a more coordinated approach that strengthens information gathering and intelligence sharing, while ensuring for essential humanitarian protections. The Republic of Macedonia, and the larger Balkan region, has experienced significant refugee crises in the past and expects significant refugee flows in the future. We know that this is a European-wide challenge that, ultimately, will require a coordinated and European-wide response to ensure appropriate security and humanitarian outcomes.

With us, the Republic of Macedonia has embarked on other ambitious reforms to grow the economy, modernize the national infrastructure, and improve opportunity for its citizens. The World Bank recently ranked the Republic of Macedonia as 12th among 189 countries in its annual ranking of nations on the ease of doing business – the 6th highest ranking in Europe. The Republic of Macedonia ranked 2nd internationally among the 189 nations in the ease of starting a business. On each of these measures, our success has come by recognizing areas in need of improvement and assessing when the status quo was no longer tenable. The same is true with the current refugee situation – we know that we need to improve coordination for both security and humanitarian reasons.
