	12:00:00 PM	Posted	GLOBAL	FEED	When Mount Vesuvius erupted in 79AD, volcanic ash, lapilli and pyroclastic flows engulfed the two flourishing Roman towns of Pompeii and Herculaneum, as well as several nearby villas. The volcano erupted right after noon, and by the next morning, the surrounding areas were covered in ash. The resulting archaeological sites are a @UNESCOWorldHeritage location including three different excavations that reveal perfectly preserved buildings, paved streets, and Roman artistry. Pompeii, a commercial town, is the only archaeological site that shows a complete picture of life in ancient Rome. Temples, public bath complexes, theaters, and an amphitheater still stand as evidence of a vibrant society. Herculaneum, a small resort town, boasts a higher level of preservation due to its closer proximity to Mount Vesuvius. The high heat of pyroclastic flows carbonized organic materials, uniquely preserving food, wooden furniture, and more. Torre Annunziata contains two small villas, one a maritime residence and the other an agricultural hub. Both held wealthier citizens of the Roman Empire, and the well-preserved, decorated wall paintings provide a window into their lavish lives. This area was severely impacted by another Vesuvius eruption in 1634! The Archaeological Areas of Pompei, Herculaneum, and Torre Annunziata were inscribed by @UNESCO in 1997, to honor and protect this unique testimony to a lost civilization. : Daniel Schild : Frans Sellies : Denis Schaal : Jeremy Villasis : Atlantide Phototravel
