"We are cautious and in contact with the president of the Republic (Aleksandar Vucic), who is conducting dialogue at the highest level with various actors as well as with the countries involved in this issue - both with the Russian and the American side," she said.

She said it was too early to make conclusions and that the situation was being monitored.

"The most important thing is to maintain price stability and market availability," the minister said.

Vucic has said he would hold discussions with both the US and Russia following an announcement of US sanctions on NIS.
