Hi everyone,

Just flagging this briefing on U.S. links to international deforestation. It's gearing up to be a big year for fire and deforestation in the tropics, and when all that haze comes in addition to the Covid pandemic, it adds up to a pretty serious public health-climate problem. We'll be talking about US imports, biofuels and other domestic connections to these problems abroad.

We'd welcome your participation and feel free to pass this invite along.

Best, Rose

Thursday, July 23, 2020 from 10:00-11:30 AM ET, Zoom Webinar

Congressional members and staff are invited to an exclusive briefing on U.S. policy and its connections to the origins of zoonotic outbreaks, land-grabs targeting Indigenous people, and deforestation in the Amazon, Indonesia, and beyond.

Forest fire season is here, and the conflagrations have already begun in Latin America and Southeast Asia. With COVID-19 cases continuing to rise, the noxious haze that billows out from these fires poses a serious threat to people battling the respiratory disease.

At the same time, the ongoing destruction of forests – sometimes under cover of COVID-19 induced shelter-in-place orders – is accelerating climate change, endangering Indigenous communities, and risking the creation of the next pandemic.

This briefing is your chance to hear from people who have witnessed these impacts first-hand, learn what role U.S. policymakers, companies, and citizens play in this pernicious knot of issues, and gain detailed perspective of what can be done to address it.

Opening Remarks

- Congresswoman Deb Haaland (NM-1st District)
