In the video, titled "How can a woman be successful?", Novák instructs women what not to do:

"Don't believe that we women must always compete with men. Don't believe that at every moment of our lives we must compare ourselves to others, and have at least the same positions and level of salaries as others."

The minister praised women's abilities to "bear the burdens of others," and encouraged female viewers to "dare to take responsible decisions," "not give up our privileges in a misinterpreted struggle for emancipation," and to experience "the beauty and opportunities that arise from the harmony of differences between men and women." (Here the video depicts a man handing an item to a woman from a tall shelf she cannot reach.)

"We should be glad we were born women, that we can give life, and that

Under socialism women HAD TO work. I'm not sure what the mechanism of compliance looked like in Hungary, but I'm certain there was one.

It's liberating to have a choice.
