On immigration, Hungary's new Ambassador @_SzabolcsTakacs says, "we are opposing [an EU and Globalist] policy which is hurting the identity and the security of European citizens and European societies, including European Jews."

That extends to Orbán's hardline views on immigration, which has caused tension with European Union member states. "What we feel is that there is sometimes unjust criticism against Hungary, simply because we are opposing a policy which is hurting the identity and the security of European citizens and European societies, including the European Jews," Takács told JI. "But I think our policy is quite consistent and very solid."

Takács framed the recent uptick in antisemitic attacks throughout Europe in the context of Hungary's opposition to migrants from places like Turkey and Syria. "The fight against antisemitism is obviously in the national interest for Hungary because it's a security issue," said Takács, adding that "uncontrolled illegal immigration" has led to "very serious physical attacks against" Jews.

They need to stop letting journalists portray criticism of Soros as "antisemitic".
