France and Japan Must Suspend All Support And Demand Investigation On Forced Displacement At World Heritage Site Angkor

President Emmanuel Macron should take a strong stance to uphold the principles of the 1991 Paris Peace Accords when he receives Hun Manet in Paris from 18-19 January. We call on President Emmanuel Macron to take swift and decisive action regarding the forced displacement of 10,000 families at the Angkor World Heritage site. As co-chairs of the International Coordinating Committee for the Safeguarding and Development of the Historic Site of Angkor, France and Japan must suspend all support and demand a comprehensive and impartial investigation into the reported forced displacement and land grabbing undertaken in the name of conserving the World Heritage site. "The Cambodian authorities cruelly uprooted families who have lived in Angkor for several generations, forcing them to live hand to mouth at ill-prepared relocation sites," said Montse Ferrer, Deputy Regional Director for Research at Amnesty International. They ended up living under tarpaulin sheets for months in an area lacking adequate sanitation. The plight of the families and their appalling conditions of resettlement has been highlighted in a report by Amnesty International. "These are forced evictions in disguise and on a mass scale," said Ming Yu Hah, Amnesty International's Deputy Regional Director for Campaigns. The Cambodian government has repeatedly misrepresented these resettlements as voluntary, including in an official report on the state of Angkor conservation received by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) World Heritage Center in December 2022. France and Japan are signatories of the Paris Peace Agreements of October 23, 1991. The signatories have commitments to respect, support, encourage, and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and dignity of Cambodians, especially those affected by injustices.

Déclaration

La France et le Japon doivent cesser tout soutien et exiger une enquête indépendante sur l'éviction forcée des familles du site du patrimoine mondial d'Angkor

Le président de la République Française Monsieur Emmanuel Macron recevra en visite officielle le premier ministre héritier cambodgien M. Hun Manet les 18 et 20 janvier prochains.

A cette occasion, nous exhortons la France en sa qualité de signataire des accords de Paris de 1991 d'agir rapidement et d'une manière décisive en conformité avec l'esprit de ces accords pour venir en aide aux 10 000 habitants que les autorités cambodgiennes ont évacués de force de la région d'Angkor.

La France et le Japon comme co-présidents du comité international de coordination pour la sauvegarde et le développement du site historique d'Angkor, doivent cesser tout soutien et exiger que soit menée une enquête complète et impartiale sur le déplacement forcé de ces 10 000 habitants et les spoliations foncières en faveur des riches et des puissants qui ont eu lieu à cette occasion.

"Les autorités cambodgiennes ont cruellement déraciné ces familles qui ont vécu dans cette région d'Angkor depuis des générations et les ont obligées à aller vivre au jour le jour sur des sites de réinstallation improvisés", a déclaré Montse Ferrer directeur régional adjoint pour la recherche d'Amnesty International.

Ces familles ont dû vivre sous des bâches pendant des mois sur un terrain dépourvu de toutes installations sanitaires les plus élémentaires. Le calvaire de ces familles et leurs épouvantables conditions de vie sont documentées et mises en lumière dans un rapport d'Amnesty International.

"Ce sont des évictions forcées à peine voilées faites à grande échelle" a déclaré Ming Yu Hah, directeur régional, d'Amnesty International pour la campagne de sensibilisation de l'opinion publique. Le gouvernement Cambodgien, à plusieurs reprises, a déformé la vérité sur ces déplacements de population en les qualifiant de relocalisations à base de volontariat dans un rapport officiel sur l'état de conservation d'Angkor reçu par le Centre du Patrimoine Mondial de l'UNESCO en décembre 2022.

La France et le Japon sont signataires des accords de Paris de 1991 et, en tant que tels, ont pris l'engagement de respecter, soutenir, encourager et protéger les droits humains, les libertés fondamentales et la dignité des cambodgiens en particulier ceux qui subissent de telles flagrantés injustices.
