President Macron and Prime Minister Rama Chart Bold Vision for Europe's Economic Future at FII PRIORITY Europe Summit

The FII PRIORITY Europe Summit concluded today in Tirana with a compelling call for economic transformation across the continent. Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

President Macron and Prime Minister Rama Chart Bold Vision for Europe's Economic Future at FII PRIORITY Europe Summit

The FII PRIORITY Europe Summit concluded today in Tirana with a compelling call for economic transformation across the continent. Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

President Macron and Prime Minister Rama Chart Bold Vision for Europe's Economic Future at FII PRIORITY Europe Summit

The FII PRIORITY Europe Summit concluded today in Tirana with a compelling call for economic transformation across the continent. Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

President Macron and Prime Minister Rama Chart Bold Vision for Europe's Economic Future at FII PRIORITY Europe Summit

The FII PRIORITY Europe Summit concluded today in Tirana with a compelling call for economic transformation across the continent. Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

The FII PRIORITY Europe Summit concluded today in Tirana with a compelling call for economic transformation across the continent. Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

Gathering over 500 participants — including heads of state, global CEOs, and next-generation changemakers — the summit presented a bold roadmap for investment, innovation, and inclusive growth.

French President Emmanuel Macron declared the beginning of a “new phase of Europe’s journey,” urging deeper integration of the single market, streamlined regulation, and accelerated investment in green technology, artificial intelligence, and defense.

Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama highlighted Albania’s emergence as a dynamic investment destination and a bridge between East and West. “Albania is good friends with many. We are strategic partners of the EU and US, and close partners to Saud Arabia, the UAE, and other Gulf countries,” he said, emphasizing openness and adaptability as national strengths.

His Excellency Yasir Al-Rumayyan, Governor of Saudi Arabia’s Public Investment Fund (PIF), reaffirmed Europe’s central role in global investment strategy: “The PIF has deployed nearly $85 billion in Europe since 2024 — a figure expected to double to $170 billion by 2030. Predictability and regulatory clarity are key to long-term commitments.”

A standout session — Board of Changemakers — brought together Senator Matteo Renzi, Bernard Mensah, Mohamed Alabbar, Professor Adah AlMutairi and Henri Poupart-Lafarge to tackle the question: Can Capital Connect a Fractured World? The panel called for bold action on over-regulation, talent development, and the reinvention of education systems to better match future labor markets.

In a powerful conversation on the evolving nature of influence, Linda Rama , Prime Minister’s wife joined Cécilia Attias to explore the role of transparency and professionalism in leadership. “When you truly get close to the youth, you find a power in them we don’t possess,” Linda Rama reflected.

Penny Richards, CEO of the FII Institute, summarized the summit’s tone: “We heard a clear message — change is no longer optional. Europe is ready to redefine its global role with renewed energy and purpose.”

The summit closed with a forward-looking dialogue — Old Europe, Young Voices — chaired by Richard Attias, Chairman of the FII Institute’s Executive Committee. Featuring insights from the Institute’s latest Future of Work report, the session called for urgent reform in education and inclusion of youth voices in policy and investment. As angel investor Elsa Hyland stated: “Include us in the conversation — we know what’s happening on the ground.”

Hi [REDACTED],

Reaching out as The Future Investment Initiative is holding a special summit on Saturday 17 May in Tirana, Albania, (immediately post the 16 May European Political Conference, 50 European heads of state).

It will be discussing Europe and the rewiring of global trade and international investment partnerships, in the days following President Trump's historic visit to Saudi and the Gulf, and with Euro Presidents including President Macron, sovereign funds, investors, and Europe business leaders. On the agenda – European defence sovereignty, Europe's trade with US and the world, Europe's fragmented VC ecosystem v Silicon Valley, AI and data power, energy, biotech, healthcare innovation, tourism as strategic soft power.

It's a small/intimate summit of 250 people (compared to the 8000 delegate Riyadh event in October). Speakers include:

- Yasir Rumayyan, Governor, Public Investment Fund of Saudi Arabia
- Edi Rama, Prime Minister of Albania
- Ahmed Al Khateeb, Minister of Tourism, Saudi Arabia
- Stefano Pontecorvo, Chairman, Leonardo
- Eva Berneke, CEO, Eutelsat
- Henri Poupart-Lafarge, CEO, Alstom
- Jared Cohen, President of Global Affairs, Goldman Sachs
- Manfredi Lefebvre d'Ovidio, Chairman, Abercrombie and Kent
- Tony Douglas, CEO, Riyadh Air
- Sahit Muja, CEO, Albanian Minerals
- Faraidon Saheb-Zadha, Founding Partner, Oros Capital Partners
- Dan Vahdat, CEO and Founder, Huma

Hi [REDACTED] – Sorry you weren't able to join this weekend but you can tune into some of the sessions here if you are interested.

Sharing a recap of the event below as well. Would you be interested in speaking with an FII executive about some of the topics addressed at the summit? If they are available, would be great to set you up with either the Chairman, Richard Attias or the CEO Penny Richards.

Let me know and happy to coordinate.

Thanks,
