As cyber threats become increasingly complex and closely connected to national security, critical infrastructure, and emerging technologies, strengthening cybersecurity cooperation has become an important priority for both the United States and South Korea.

Join us for a timely discussion on the future of U.S.-ROK cyber cooperation, including evolving threats to critical infrastructure, cyber resilience and incident response, public-private information sharing, and policy and institutional coordination between the two countries.

The seminar will also explore lessons from existing U.S.-ROK cybersecurity cooperation and future priorities for strengthening the bilateral cyber partnership amid rapid technological change and an evolving security environment.
