The gaping hole in Middle East ties

CHINA'S NEW SILK ROAD INITIATIVES MAKE IT IMPERATIVE TO DEEPEN ECONOMIC TIES WITH VARIOUS REGIONS

The world has major known strategic regions, such as North America, Europe, the Middle East and China. All these regions are important, but the Middle East is the most active in historical and cultural terms. The Middle East and North Africa, and the Arab states that make up the Gulf Cooperation Council, are not working with each other as they should be.

Among the main reasons for this is that they have the least cultural engagement in comparison with other regions. There is a divergence in values, interests and beliefs as well as gaps in language and cultural understanding. Moreover, there is a lack of opportunities to engage beyond national borders. Lastly, there are few incentives for the Middle East and North Africa to engage with the rest of the world.

China has a great deal of potential to bridge the Middle East and North Africa. It has a long history of trade and cultural exchange with the region. In addition, China has a large number of people of Arab descent and a large number of people of Chinese descent in the region. This provides a natural bridge between the two regions.

China's new Silk Road initiatives make it imperative to deepen economic ties with various regions. This includes the Middle East and North Africa. China should take the lead in this regard. It should encourage trade and investment between the Middle East and North Africa and the rest of the world. It should also encourage cultural and educational exchange between the two regions.
